FOREST TREE CULTURE.

Communicated.

I have examined carefully, and watched the growth of young forest trees, on tree claims in Northern Minnesota and Dakota, for the past five years I find but few parties who are satisfied with their work, planting trees or seeds. Those who have succeeded in growing young trees—confined themselves to few varieties of timber. First, Box Elder; Second, Cottonwood; Third, Ash. All hardy trees in our native forests. Especially Box Elder and Cottonwood; the best trees to transplant on our prairie soil. Those parties who have done best growing timber, thoroughly prepared their ground before hand. There ought to be two crops of grain harvested from land, first, to take the wild grass nature from the soil, so that sod will pulverize and work up mellow while cultivating it. Whatever grain is sowed on land to prepare it, should be as free from weed seed as possible, to save extra work on claims from the first. The land should be plowed in spring just before planting, also thoroughly—harrow it. Then mark it off in rows four each way same as you would for corn. If all trees are planted it will require twenty-seven hundred to each acre, or thirteen thousand five hundred for five acres. Two year old trees are safest to plant as they have become wood-hardened. Two men with sharp spades can set three thousand trees in a day. The small trees should have their roots kept in water, in a pail, carried on the field while planting. Put the spade in the earth where the rows cross each other, down six or eight inches in depth throw it forward take a tree from the pail insert it in the hole behind the spade, hold it uprightly with one hand, withdraw the spade and press the soil firmly around the roots of the little tree with the feet. If tap roots of the little trees are too long cut them off two or three inches before planting. The trees should be set in the soil good depth so they will not dry out during a drought. If parties can afford the first expense, of all trees, it is the easiest plan to handle a tree claim—as a horse and cultivator can do nearly all the work with but little hoeing. Next best plan and cheapest at first cost, is to mark off land after it is harrowed with a plow in rows eight feet apart each way. At intersection where furrows cross each other, plant a tree. This plan will take seven hundred trees to an acre! or thirty-five hundred for five acres, fill up balance of spaces between trees with seed. Box Elder seed is best. It should be soaked in warm water three or four days to soften the dry husk and cause it to germinate quickly. Cover the seed very light with soil, from one half to one inch in depth. This method of planting a tree claim with trees and seed is not expensive, very good, as you can commence cultivating before the seed is up both ways leaving space where seed is planted in a little square which can be readily hoed out when plants are up high enough to be seen. The main work of ea tre claim in cultivation should be done with a horse to save expense of hoeing. Where all seed is planted the claim is often neglected until weeds are too large and thick to make it almost impossible to clean the land. Parties become discouraged and finally abandon the claim to be turned into a homestead or pre-emption. The month of May is the best time to plant trees and seeds in this climate while soil is warm and quick in growth. If planted too late drouth often kills the young plants and trees. They ought not be cultivated too late in the season of growth for they will be tender and apt to winter kill. There should be some protection from winter frosts either by letting weeds grow in latter part of summer to hold snow around roots of young trees for plants, or [illegible] eight feet each way [illegible] to catch snow during winter [illegible] trees are three or four [illegible] but little protection [illegible] winters are [illegible] severe on one and two year old trees especially where there is clean cultivation late in the season, which I have found out by experience in my Nursery. From my own experience and those whom I have seen succeed with timber culture, there was first a thorough preparation of soil before planting. Second, care taken to plant well. Third, thorough cultivation through the month of June and most of July. If parties will give one half of the time to cultivate a tree claim which they would have to do to raise a good crop of corn they will have success raising trees. Especially if land is good and free from alkali. The forest when once started will well pay for expense and troubled of growing it, not only for its fuel which will be needed in a few years but the enhanced value to the land in dollars and cents, as a protection to farm buildings from blizzards, snow drifts, and cold winds of our severe witnters.

HOW TO ORGANIZE.

Organization of Subordinate Alliances may be effected by seven operative farmers, signing a request in any form designating place of holding meeting and name, if any, for the Alliance, and sending this application to Geo. W. Haigh, State Secretary, Mankato, Blue Earth county, Minn., who will return a charter from the State Alliance.

Any form of Constitution not conflicting with the accompanying State Constitution will be all that is required. We send the following as a very suitable form of Constitution and by-laws for Subordinate Alliance, but Alliances are at liberty to make its own constitutions and by-laws.

SUBORDINATE ALLIANCE CONSTITUTION.

Art. 1.—This Alliance shall be constituted of at least seven members, who shall be practical and operative farmers and shall be called — Alliance No. — of the State of Minnesota.

Art. 2.—This Alliance shall hold regular meetings at least once a month, and not oftener than once a week. Five members shall constitute a quorum.

Art. 3.—Application for membership shall be made through a member of the Alliance, who shall personally vouch for the applicant as being a farmer and of good moral character. The application shall be referred to a committee of three members, which shall report at the next meeting unless further time is given. If the committee report favorably or unfavorably, a ballot shall be had, which shall be by depositing a written or printed ticket bearing the word "Yes" or bearing the word "No"—the former admitting to membership, and the latter rejecting. If two-thirds of the members voting shall vote in favor of the reception of the candidate, he shall be declared elected; otherwise he shall be declared rejected. If elected he shall, to become a member, and sign this constitution.

Art. 4.—The officers of this Alliance shall be a President, a vice-President, a Secretary and Treasurer, who shall perform the duties of such officers as prescribed in the Western Rural Manual. After the first election the officers shall be elected at the first regular meetings in July and January—the regular term of office being six months.

Art. 5.—There shall be a finance committee composed of three, named by the President, subject to the approval of the Alliance, who shall audit all bills before they are paid, and shall examine the books and accounts of the treasurer, and reports as to their condition on the day or night of every election. When the finance committee have endorsed a bill favorably, the treasurer shall pay it, unless objection is made, after the secretary has publicly announced that such a bill has been presented and approved. Then the vote of the Alliance shall be taken upon it.

Art. 6.—The objects of this Alliance are first, to enable the farmers to better, by united effort, protect themselves against hostile legislation, resist the further encroachments of the great railroad combinations, and to endeavor to place the railroads under the controle of the United States government as the most practical way of ending the discriminations, and rings within rings that are robbing the producers and shippers of the country in the interests of a few men. Second, to secure a more equitable assessment of taxes so that each property owner will be compelled to pay according to the protection that his property requires. Third, to work for the elevation of agriculture by the mental, moral and social improvement of its members, which can best be affected by frequent meetings, free discussions, cultivating and developing their best talent for business. By inspection and trial adopt a more rational system of tillage—one guided by the exercise of more brains, and thereby command a return commensurate with the capital, brain and muscle employed in its production. The Alliance will seek by plans and joint arrangements to obtain higher prices for all he consumes of others' products. To encourage and practice the cash system in buying and selling, thereby saving heavy expenses incurred in losses, by agencies, officers and interest. To oppose special and class legislation, and rebuke misguided legislation of the past. To endeavor to secure the nomination and election of good men for office, and spurn as dangerous to liberty and economy all professional office-seekers. To denounce all political rings, machine candidates, and special privileges to corporations, and frown upon the efforts of all classes of professional men in charging exorbitant, unreasonable and oppressive fees. In this Alliance the largest liberty shall be allowed for the discussion of all questions, religious, political, financial or domestic, which can possibly interest the real farmers. This Alliance is to work for more favorable agricultural legislation—more equitable taxation, equal rights in transportation, lower rates of interest, cheaper administration of the laws, more respect to the true wants of the people, and especially a more thorough representation in the halls of legislation and in Congress.

BY-LAWS

Each Alliance will make its own By-laws, which shall not conflict with the constitution. We offer the following suggestions for the formation: They should first specify the day and hour of meeting. We would recommend that meetings be held as frequently as possible. The frequency may be varied to suit the season. Second, they should specify the order of business which should be:—1st. Call to order. 2d. Reading of the minutes of the previous meeting. 3d. Proposals of candidates for membership and voting for them. 4th. Communications from the National, State or Subordinate Alliances, or from individuals. 5th. Unfinished business laid over from previous meeting, if any. 6th. New business, if any. 7th. The regular exercises which may consist of speeches, essays, discussions, singing, etc.

These exercises ought to be regulated by strict rules, that should specify the order of exercise, length of time to be occupied by each speaker, especially in debate. No personalties or vulgar language should be allowed. Strict rules should be made regulating the conduct of members, providing conditions of expulsion for bad conduct, etc. When a member is expelled the National Alliance should be notified.

The By-Laws should also specify ways and means for raising such expenses as may be incurred by each local Alliance. This may be done on the voluntary plan, by passing around a contribution box, or each one may be taxed a certain sum yearly or quarterly.

The Alliance is not a society, and its meetings should be public. Secret sessions may be held if necessary.

Any farmer, farmer's wife, son, or daughter above the age of eighteen may be admitted into this Alliance, but ought not to be allowed to vote until they reach the legal age of twenty-one years.

By-Laws may be changed by a two-thirds vote.

OFFICERS OF STATE ALLIANCE.

President—GEO. W. SPRAGUE, of Prosper, Fillmore county.

Vice President—D. G. WILLARD, Redwood Falls, Redwood county.

Secretary—GEO. W. HAIGH, Mankato, Blue Earth county.

Treasurer—M. M. PRATT, Sterling Center, Blue Earth county.

STOCK RAISING.

To the progressive farmer, the one who makes his profession a study, it is plain that in order to obtain the best results, he must get out of the old rut and diversify his operations. The old plan has been to raise wheat to the almost entire exclusion of everything else. This plan, the progressive farmer realizes, if it does not impoverish him entirely is calculated to keep him everlastingly on the lowest rung of the ladder. In speaking of President Hill's stock farm, the Pioneer-Press of a recent date says:

"As before stated the cattle at North Oaks (Polled Angus breed) do not receive any more attention or care than is given by every careful farmer to his stock, and it may be added that they do not eat near as much. (The Jerseys are the biggest gluttons.) Hay, corn fodder, and bran, with a little linseed oil cake, constitute their food. Roots of some sort—rutabagas generally—are fed further east, and are desirable; but none were procurable, and the North Oaks herd do not show the need of them. In the counties of Clay, Douglas, Grant, Kandiyohi, Meeker, Otter Tail, Polk, Pope, Stevens, Swift and Wilkin in Minnesota, it is estimated there are 55,000 cows; while in Cass, Trail, Grand Forks, Walsh and Pembina there are 18,000 more—a total of 73,000. It is interesting to consider how much more these would be worth to their owners had they an infusion of such blood as is found in the North Oaks herds. Not only as givers of milk but as mothers of beeves, in the later particular more largely, would the advantage be patent. The figuring is simple. A common breed weighs when ready for the block, ten or at most twelve hundred. His better bred cousin weighs from sixteen to eighteen hundred, while the meat of the former is worth in the general market but 4½ cents as against 6½ readily given for that of the latter. The common eats more, it as subject to animal ills, and requires as much care as the more patrician quadruped. But to give statistics. A farm of 150 acres in the Red River Valley, well cultivated, the happy-go-lucky style being eliminated, will raise 4,500 bushels of wheat, or thirty bushels to the acre. A farm 250 acres, is usually cultivated, does well when eighteen bushels per acre is yielded, or a total of 4,500 bushels. Now, on part of that 100 acres, why not raise good cattle—not the scrubs. No wonder the farmers are not enamored of results obtained from them. Suppose the farmer has twenty-five head of good half-breeds, Shorthorns or of the Polled Angus variety. He has seven months of the year in which to give his attention to them, and in three years he will have five head to sell. These five animals will weigh from 1,600 1,800 each, and he can ship them to Chicago and net 6½ cents a pound for the beef. They are worth, therefore $500, and of this $375 is clear profit, for the five have not cost him more than $25 each in the raising—good cattle men say $15 each is a large enough allowance. Each year he has $375 of assured increase, to say nothing of the increaseing value of his herd. Not only this; instead of burning his straw he has stacked it, and in the spring finds himself with plenty of manure. He can give as well as take from his land, augment its productiveness at least 33½ per cent. Hogs, too, will pay him to keep. Why, nowhere can as find potatoes be raised as in Dakota. An acre well cultivated will yield 500 bushels of potatoes; another acre if manured properly will yield him sixty bushels barley. Cook the potatoes and barley together and feed them to the hogs and the Dakota farmer can carry fiive times as many to the acre as the Iowa man can on corn. These are not wild statements, as W. H. Fisher of Beltrami can testify from personal experience. To return to the cattle subject. The farmers in the Scotland valleys where the Polled Angus breed are raised, pay $25 per acre rental on their land, feed their cattle American bran at $35 per ton and Minneapolis oil cake at $50 per ton, fed themselves and their families on American flour made from Dakota wheat, and make money. Why not feed their bran at home?"

So far, Crookston has fortunately escaped the ravages of that dreaded monster the Fire Fiend, but we know not at what hour he may appear in our midst. The only way to meet this terrible foe is by good, reliable Insurance. Look over our Million List of staunch, fire-tested companies and make your selection before you have cause to regret a loss.

Mr. Warninger has the best wishes of the JOURNAL in this new venture.

We understand that some of the clerks in the numerous stores in our city are talking a good deal about who can fix up the finest show window. We made a visit to T. B. Walker's new saw mill last Tuesday, and must say that we were surprised at its magnitude. There are about 30 or 40 men busily engaged in setting up machinery, and putting on the finishing touches. The immense smoke stack is nearly completed. This mill is second to none in the State, and we hope it will not be long until we hear the buzz of the saws and rattle of machinery. This mill will not only help Crookston but will be a great help to all the people in the Red River Valley.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

The bill passed on the 26th to remove certain burdens of the American merchant marine and encourage an American foreign carrying trade, after the amendment had been adopted—111 to 00—allowing American citizens to import steel or iron ships of at least 4,000 tons burthen free of duty.

The house committee on appropriations have reported the bill making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service. The amount appropriated is $977,770 which is $307,275 less than the estimate and $318,085 less than the appropriation for the present year. The measure reduces the contingent expenses of legations $60,500, and of consulates $20,000. The allowance for clerks at consulates is reduced $5,000, and the annual salaries to Austria and Italy are reduced from $12,000 to $10,000. The office of agent and consul general at Cairo is made a consulate, at an annual salary of $2,000. The office of minister to Roumania, Servia and Greece is abolished, and consuls are provided for Greece and Roumania. A similar change is made in the office of minister to Bolivia. The consul-generalship at Madrid and consul-generalship at Honolulu are abolished, as are a number of unimportant consuls at other places. The salary of the minister to Columbia is increased from $7,500 to $10,000, and of the consul general at Hong Kong from $4,000 to $5,000.

A bill to establish an interstate commerce committee, taking the place of other bills on the same subject, was reported in the senate on Monday, and the bills it superseded were indefinitely postponed. The bill to consolidate the bureau of military justice and the corps of judge advocates of the army passed. The pleuro-pneumonia bill was considered. Amendments were adopted striking out all reference to the slaughter of cattle, and reducing the amount appropriated from $250,000 to $150,000.

Bills were introduced in the house devoting the tax on circulating notes of national banks to the payment of the public debt, and prohibiting the importation of foreign manufactured articles purporting to be of American manufacture. Mr. Hewitt of New York repeated his charge, made last Friday, that the secretary of the navy had failed to cover into the treasury the net proceeds of sales of condemned vessels, but he disclaimed any intention of impugning the secretary's motives, and commended his administration as a whole.

The subcommittee of the house committee on public lands decided favorably to report to the full committee the bill granting bounty lands to soldiers of the late war. The bill provides:

Every person who served in the late war not less than fourteen days, and honorably discharged, shall be entitled to eighty acres of public lands; those who served not less than one year to 120 acres, and those who served not less than two years to 160 acres. In the event of the death of such person during service or after honorable discharge, patent shall issue to his surviving wife, child or children, if there be any, and if none, to his father, and if no father, to his mother.

The senate passed the pleuro-pneumonia bill, the only votes against it being the following democratic senators: Brown, Cook, Groome, Hampton, Jones, (Fla.,) Maxey, Morgan, Ransom, and Vance.

Mr. Morrill, from the committee on finance, reported favorably a joint resolution appropriating $25,000 to defray the expenses of the ceremonies connected with the approaching completion and dedication of the Washington monument. A committee of arrangements for the occasion is provided for, to consist of five senators and eight representatives, three members of the Washington Monument association, and the United States engineer in charge of the work. The oration will be delivered by Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, who delivered the oration on the occasion of the laying of the corner stone in 1848.

The joint resolution passed the house requesting the president to bring before the Venezuelan government the claim of J. E. Wheelock, a citizen of the United States, for outrages inflicted upon him by an officer of that government.

The features of Tuesday's debate in the house on the tariff bill, were the speeches of Mr. Hiscock of New York and Mr. Hurd of Ohio.

Hiscock delivered an able speech against the bill. New ideas on this well-worn theme are scarcely to be expected. The points of his speech have been covered by previous speakers, but he presented his arguments in a clear and forcible manner. His remarks, which occupied an hour and a half, lost much of their effectiveness by being read from manuscript. Hurd's speech on the Morrison bill had been looked forward to with keen interest, not less by its enemies than by its friends. Nor did he disappoint them. Applause was most hearty, even from the Republicans; not in the approval of the sentiments of the speaker, but as a tribute to his eloquence. The crowded galleries joined in these outbursts, no attempts being made to check them. Several times the speaker was compelled to pause for several minutes. Even Judge Kelley, the veteran defender of the protection faith, clapped his hands in admiration of the orator.

The senate passed the following bills: To authorize the Oregon Pacific Railroad company to construct one or more bridges across the Willamette river between Salem and the head of navigation of the river in Oregon; to release the estate of Frank Soulé, deceased, late collector of internal revenue First district of California, and his sureties from liability for the defalcation of a clerk in the collector's office; to accept and ratify the agreement with the confederated tribes of Flathead, Kootenay and Pend d'Oreilles Indians for a portion of their reservation in Montana required for use of the Northern Pacific road. The lands surrendered comprise 1,430 acres, for which the Indians receive $16,000, beside $7,625 compensation for damages to improvements.

In the senate, the bill to release from the obligation of secrecy the members of the Fitz John Porter court-martial was indefinitely postponed. The bill to aid in the construction of a ship canal between Lakes Union and Washington and Puget sound, Wash., was reported favorably. The shipping bill was debated.

In the house, on the 1st, a motion of Mr. Morrison that general debate on the tariff bill be closed at 4 p. m. next Tuesday was agreed to, and the house proceeded, in committee of the whole to discuss the bill. Among the speakers was Mr. Eaton, a democratic member from Connecticut, who fiercely denounced the measure. The bill was further debated at the evening session.

Chicago's High Houses

The city is drunken with prosperity. Previous to this date the lavish expenditure in architectural display in buildings has astonished the world. For gaudiness and extravagance in business houses, Chicago has exceeded New York. But this season they propose to eclipse any city in the world in fine business houses. The Pullman Car company is going to put up a building which will not only exceed anything in America, but eclipse any building in the old world. It is intended to be a model building for the world. It is to be on Adams street, and 127 by 170 on the ground, and ten stories high. The description of this building as given in the Chicago Journal of Commerce, is perfectly marvelous. But this is not to be all of Chicago's folly this summer. Other new buildings, the Calumet, the Montauk, the Counselman, and the Marshall Field buildings are to be nine stories, and each to cover nearly a square. Armour & Kent are also to put up the largest and highest building in America. It [illegible] 175 feet on Van Buren and [illegible] Sherman streets, and to be [illegible] high, beside the basement, and to be of the most elaborate [illegible] style of architecture. And [illegible] is a part of the extravagance [illegible] exhibited in building in this [illegible] which seems to control [illegible] the trade and commerce of the west.—Des Moines Register.

IN AND OUT OF LOVE.

How did I know that she was a widow?

Don't you give me credit for any common sense or discrimination at all?

How do you know that a rose is red?

How do you know lobster salad from sardines?

I knew she was a widow from the very moment I took the corner seat in the car, opposite to her little black bonnet with its fluttering breath of crape veil, and the astrakan muff that held her two tiny black-gloved hands.

How I envied that muff.

Don't tell me of your Venuses, your Madonnas, and your Marys, Queen of Scots—they couldn't have held a candle to this delicious little widow.

I never did believe in grand beauties! A woman has no business overawing and impressing you against your will.

And she was one of your dimpled, daisy-faced creatures with soft, brown eyes, long-lashed and limpid, and a red mouth which looked as if it was just made to be kissed.

And then there was a tangle of golden spirals of hair hanging over her forehead, and braids upon braids pinned under her bonnet, until a hairdresser would have gone frantic at the sight.

Just as I was taking an inventory of these things in that sort of an unobservant way that I flatter myself belongs to a man of the world, she dropped her muff, and, of course, it rolled under the car seat.

Wasn't I down on my knees at once after it? I rather think so.

"Thank you sir," said the delicious little widow.

"Not at all," I replied. "Can I do anything more for you?"

"No thank you—unless you could tell me what time we get into Glendale.

Glendale," I cried. "Why I am going to Glendale."

Of course we were friends at once, and the daisy-faced enchantress made room for me beside her, "lest" as she said, "some horrid, disagreeable creature should crowd in and bore her to death," and I stepped right out of the musty, ill-ventilated world of the railway carriage into an atmosphere of Eden.

When a bachelor of forty falls in love at first sight—oh, what a fall is there my countrymen. No half measures, I tell you.

Before we had been speeding through the wintry landscape an hour, I had already built up several blocks of chateaux d'Espagne, in my mind.

I saw my bachelor rooms brightened with her presence.

I fancied myself walking to church with her hand on my arm.

I heard her dulcet voice saying, "My dear Thomas, what would you like for supper, to-night?" I beheld myself a respectable member of society—the head of a family.

What would Bob Carter say now—I meant then? Bob, who was always rallying me on my state of hopeless old-bachelorhood, who supposed, forsooth, because he happened to be a trifle younger and better looking than myself, that I had no chances whatever.

I'd show Bob!

"What did we talk about?"

The weather, of course, the prospect—all the available topics, one after another; the more we talked, the deeper grew my admiration.

She was so sensible and so original, and so everything else that she ought to be!

I discovered that she preferred a town life to the seclusion of a country residence—so did I. Who would stagnate when he could feel the world's pulses as they throbbed?

She loved the opera—so did I. She thought this woman's suffrage movement all ridiculous—with a bewitching little lisp on the last syllable—I agreed with her.

She thought a woman's true sphere was home; my feelings surged up too strongly for utterance, and I merely bowed my assent.

Here was a delicious unanimity of soul—a mute concord of sympathy.

What would Bob Carter say when he saw this beautiful little robin lured into my cage. How I would lord it over him. How I would invite him to "happen in at any time." How I would—figuratively, of course—hold up Mrs. Thomas Smith over his envying eyes. I uttered an audible chuckle as I thought of these things, which I had some difficulty in changing into a cough.

"You've got a cold," said the widow, sympathetically. "Do, please have one of my troches; they are so soothing to the throat."

I took the troche, but I didn't swallow it. I would as soon have eaten a priceless pearl. I put it in my left-hand breast pocket, as near my heart as practicable.

Her first gift!

"A bachelor like me is used to such things," I said, in an off-hand manner.

"A bachelor!" echoed my traveling companion. "Bless me, then you are not married?"

"Unfortunately, no."

"It's never too late to mend," hazarded the widow, roguishly.

"That is my sole consolation," I answered, gallantly.

"There is nothing like married life," sighed the widow, with a momentary eclipse of the limpid, brown orbs, beneath the whitest of drooping lids. "But what's the use of my talking about it to you? You can't understand."

"You can imagine," I replied modestly.

"You must find a wife as soon as possible," said the widow, looking intently at the hem of her pocket handkerchief. "You're only living half a life, now. Ah, you cannot think how much happier you would be with some gentle clinging being at your side—some congenial soul to mirror your own."

Instinctively I laid my hand on my heart.

"Do not fancy that I shall lose an instant in the search," I said. "I have already pictured to myself the pleasures of a newer existence."

"Have you——?" The brown eyes shot a [illegible] challenging sparkle toward me. "Tell me all about her [illegible]"

"Do you really [illegible]"

[illegible]

a charming pink suffusion over her dimples. "Is she young?"

"Yes, about your age."

"Pretty?"

"More than pretty—beautiful."

The widow arched her perfectly penciled eye-brows. "What a devoted husband you will make? and when are you to be married?"

"Are you acquainted with Mr. Carter, Mrs. Alvern's brother?" asked the widow presently.

"Yes," I answered, with a little grimace. "A self-conceited, disagreeable puppy."

"Do you think so?" asked the widow, doubtfully.

"Of course as everybody else. So will you, when you meet him."

"Shall I?"

"A man who thinks because he's got a handsome face, and a smooth tongue, that nobody else has any business in creation."

"Dear, dear!" twittered my companion; "that's very bad, indeed."

"Of course he will pay a good deal of attention to you, if you are to be his sister's guest," I pursued; "but it won't do to encourage him."

"No!"

"By no means. He's a professional flirt."

"Is it possible?" lisped the widow.

And I mentally shook hands with myself for having thus deftly put a spoke in Bob's wheel.

First impressions are everything, and I certainly had been beforehand with the pretty widow. Neither had I any compunctions of conscience, for hadn't Bob been playing practical jokes of all styles and complexions on me, ever since we had entered the bar side by side?

"Stupid Tom," had been his pet name for me, always; but this wasn't so very "stupid" a game, after all.

While I was thus metaphorically hugging myself, the conductor bawled out, "Glendale," and I sprang up to assist my lovely companion out of the car, cheerfully burdening myself with bags, baskets, parasols, and bulky wraps.

As we stepped upon the platform, I nearly tumbled into the arms of—Bob Carter.

"Hullo, Tom!" was his inelegant greeting. "You don't grow any lighter as you grow older."

I was about to retort bitterly, when a sudden change overcame his face, as he beheld the pretty widow behind me.

"Gertie!" he exclaimed, clasping both her hands in his.

"Yes Robert," she answered, with sparkling eyes and flushed cheeks. "That gentleman has got my parcels; he has been very kind to me."

"Oh, has he though? well, we won't trouble him any further. I am much obliged to you Tom, and we'll send you cards to the wedding."

"To What wedding?" I gasped.

"Didn't you tell him, Gerty". Why to our wedding, the tenth of next month, to be sure. Au revoir! Tom, be careful of yourself for my sake."

And this was the last I ever saw of my daisy-faced widow. For if you think I was mean-spirited enough to go to that wedding, you are mistaken in my character.

AN ANCIENT CAPITAL.

The Cradle of the Southern Race.

This old peninsula, between the James and the York Rivers is the cradle of the Southern races. I have been at Williamsburg, the capital of Virginia, from the abandonment of Jamestown to the legislative occupation of Richmond, an interval of about eighty years. Virginia had about 40,000 inhabitants when Williamsburg became the capital, of whom nearly 2,000 were negro slaves and 6,000 white slaves, or people serving their time. When the capital was removed to Richmond in 1779, Virginia contained perhaps 500,000 people, as her population is put eleven years later at nearly 750,000. Here at Williamsburg occured most of the events which led to the adoption of the cause of New England by the most powerful state to the south of her, and the biography of Virginia was almost all molded at Williamsburg. Washington may be said to have been created in this poor little town, which now has hardly 1,400 people, including the population of the lunatic asylum now located here, which contains several hundred.

The Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad runs right to the town, and any person from the west curious on historical matters can stop over between trains, and will receive hospitable treatment. The people are singularly courteous and simple-minded, and their knowledge of their own history is so absurd that I advise anybody who comes to have himself posted in his own library, that he may draw his own inferences. You leave the railroad station and take a path that carries you across a sort of common and down through a kind of dry ravine or gully, and in a few minutes you come out upon a very broad street, perhaps three-quarters of a mile long, and sandy, and it appears to have lost from old age a good many of its buildings, because you see a house here and one yonder, and then old cellarways between them, and then goose pastures, and, perhaps, in the background, and if they had withdrawn from so much noise and fashion, there are old houses, with lanes and lawns a quarter of a mile long.

Almost every house has green moss on the roof. Most of them have big chimneys at the ends, which hold up the decrepit structures between. Some of these houses are made of bricks with an imported look, as if they were brought back on the tobacco vessels for ballast. More of these houses are built of frame, and I should say that in all Williamsburg there are about thirty or forty quite old and dignified looking mansions, and the biggest of these is said to have been the house of George Wythe, who introduced Jefferson, and was a singular character, and is said to have taught one of his slaves Greek. At one end of the town is the old William and Mary College, consisting of a central brick building, several times repaired and burnt out, and of two ancient-looking side buildings, one of which is occupied by Mr. Ewell, a brother of the rebel general, who has, I am told, not one single pupil at the present time, the institution existing in the body but not in the spirit. Mr. Ewell has a farm some miles back, and comes in almost every day, and [illegible] pupil [illegible]

A Great Gambler Failed.

New York Special: On a put for 2,000 Western Union and small puts on Erie, James R. Keene failed to respond, and with that failure announced to the street that he had reached the bottom of the splendid fortune which a few years ago was the wonder and admiration of speculators. It for some time had been suspected that Keene was in a strait, but pluck kept him up, and until lately he thought he would pull through. Very little was held aginst him by brokers, but he has privileges out of which have come heavy losses. He paid out recently to holders of his stocks $175,000. The failure was for but $14,000.

The following statement was issued for publication:

After paying out millions of dollars in cash during the last few months, in my efforts to protect my privileges in the falling market, I have finally determined to call a halt in the interests of those with whom I have business.

JAMES R. KEENE.

Keene's career has been wonderful. He made his fortune in silver speculation in San Francisco. He was a bull in Crown Point from $10 to $2,700, and a bear all the way down. It is estimated that his winnings there were from three to five millions. Coming here in 1879, entered the market as a bull and was credited in two years with having added to his fortune $7,000,000. Meanwhile he had won a reputation as being one of the pluckiest operators ever on the street. Everything he touched during his success turned to money, and quite early in his Wall street experience he worsted Mr. Gould. It is curious that the remarkable drop in Gould's Western Union, recently was the direct cause of Keene's failure. Luck turned against him in 1881. He lost on wheat at Chicago and had a fight with the Standard Oil company, which cost him an immense sum. Then some of his speculations turned on him. He fought pluckily, but could not resist the tide. He has paid out within two years millions of dollars on privilege accounts.

A Wretched Iowan's Deed.

A special gives the details of a horrible crime near Roland Tuesday night. Edward Thompson a young Norweigan, went home intoxicated and tried to shoot his wife. He was prevented by his wife's sister, who succeeded in getting the revolver. The wife got out of doors and started for a neighbors, when he pursued her with an axe. Overtaking her, he felled her to the ground and repeated the blow four times, each blow indenting and fracturing the skull. Supposing her dead he ran away. Her sister called for help and the wife was found in a comatose state. Surgeons worked for hours extracting pieces of skull and relieving the pressure from the brain. It is thought she has a slight chance of recovery. A search for Thompson showed that he had plunged head first in a deep well and thus ended his existence. He was dissipated and had made his wife's life unhappy ever since their marriage.

Murder in a Kansas Bank.

A courier brings news of a daring attempt to rob the Medicine Valley bank of Medicine Lodge, thirty-five miles west of Harper, Kansas, in which the cashier was killed and the president fatally wounded. On Wednesday, the 30th, four men, amed with Winchester rifles and revolvers rode up to the bank. Two remained with the horses, while the others entered demanding money. E. W. Payne, president, and George G. expert cashier were in the bank. They refused to comply with the result above stated. The city marshal just then appeared and opened fire on the men. Outside citizens gathered rapidly, and the robbers, seeing the game was up, quickly mounted and galloped away without having secured booty. Within ten minutes thirty men were in hot pursuit, and the chances are that the robbers will be captured and summarily dealt with. No clue to their identity.

125 Years Old.

Messrs. Francis Newbery & Son, London, England, established for 125 years, write: As a testimonial from one of the oldest drug-houses in Great Britain, respecting your household remedy, will no doubt be of interest to you, we are pleased to make the statement that we have sold St. Jacobs Oil with satisfaction to the public, for several years' and that owing to the extraordinary merits of the article, the demand is continually increasing, and that we have heard of many favorable reports regarding its great virtue as a pain-curing remedy.

Death of a Prominent Badger.

O. M. Conover, LL. D., court reporter of the Wisconsin supreme court, died very suddenly and unexpectedly in London, England, at 1 o'clock Wednesday morning, the 30th, of heart disease, aged fifty-nine years. Eighteen months ago he was married, for the second time to Miss Sarah Dean, sister of Gen. Lucius Fairchild, since which time he had been taking an extended bridal tour in Europe. Mr. Conover was born at Dayton, Ohio, and graduated at Princeton college, both from the classical and theological departments. He went to Wisconsin in 1858, preached, practiced law, and edited a literary magazine, and from 1852 to 1858 was professor of ancient languages and literature in the state university, at Madison, resigning that position to practice law. In 1870 he was appointed court reporter. He leaves three children who live in Madison, one son being a professor of engineering in the university, and another practicing law, while a daughter is matron of ladies' hall at the university.

J. J. Knox's Successor.

Mr. Henry W. Cannon of Stillwater, Minn., has been nominated as Mr. Knox's successor, and will be confirmed without opposition. Mr John Jay Knox remained at the desk of the controller of the currency, which he has occupied for twelve years, and then took the train for New York to assume the presidency of the Bank of the Republic in that city. There was no formality about his leave, but he worked at the business before him until the hour came for him to take the train. He will be dined by the bankers of Boston Monday, but does not expect to return to Washington until the latter part of June.

* * * ROCHESTER, June 1, 1882. "Ten Years ago I was attacked with the most Intense and deathly pains in my back and —Kidneys

"Extending to the end of my toes and to my brain!

"Which made me delirious!

"From agony.

"It took three men to hold me on my bed at times!

"The doctors tried in vain to relieve me. But to no purpose.

"Morphine and other opiates

"Had no effect!

"After two months I was given up to die!

"When my wife heard a neighbor say what Hop Bitters had done for her, she at once got and gave me some. The first dose eased my brain and seemed to go hunting through my system for the pain.

"The second dose eased me so much that I slept two hours, something I had not done for two months. Before I had used five bottles, I was well and at work, as hard as any man could, for over three weeks; but I worked too hard for my strength, and taking a hard cold, I was taken with the most acute and painful rheumatism all through my system that was ever known. I called the doctors again, and after several weeks they left me a cripple on crutches for life, as they said. I met a friend and told him my case and he said Hop Bitters had cured him and would cure me. I poohed at him, but he was so earnest I was induced to use them again. In less than four weeks I threw away my crutches and went to work lightly and kept on using the Bitters for five weeks, until I became as well as any man living, and have been so for six years since. It also cured my wife who had been so for years; and has kept her and my children well and hearty with from two to three bottles per year. There is no need to be sick at all if these Bitters are used. J. J. BERK, Ex-Supervisor.

CANCER

The experience in the treatment of Cancer with Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) would seem to warrant us in saying that it will cure this much dreaded scourge. Persons so afflicted are invited to correspond with us.

I beleive Swift's Specific has saved my life. I had virtually lost use of the upper part of my body and my arms from the poisonous effects of a large cancer on my neck, from which I had suffered for 20 years. S. S. S. has relieved me of all soreness, and the poison is being forced out of my system. I will soon be well. W. R. Robison, Davisboro, Ga.

Two months ago my attention was called to the case of a woman afflicted with a cancer on her shoulder at least 5 inches in circumference, angry, painful, and giving the patient no rest day or night for 6 months. Compressed Paragraphs.

A Chicago paper says: "The following illustrates the career of a great showman: 1870, unknown; 1872, a man named Haverly; 1874, Jack Haverly; 1876, Mr. John H. Haverly; 1878, Manager Haverly; 1880, Colonel J. H. Haverly; 1880, Gen. J. H. Haverly; 1884, Jack Haverly."

Dr. Miller who made the examination of Guiteau's brain, has been devoting considerable attention to the effect of different professions on longevity. His conclusion is that the average life of business men is fifty years in this country and sixty in England, statesmen seventy-two in England to seventy here, English chief justices sixty-eight, Americans, sixty. The Americans, in his opinion, are too active and not regular enough in their habits.

A Boston man writes of doctors who advertise: "Many such advertisers are specialists, and on old physician frankly tells me that as the practice of medicine is all an experiment, the regulars always use the goods which these specialists have proven to be efficacious. They spend years studying the eye, ear or some other part of the body, and consequently know more about it than a doctor with a general practice, who consults old books and is not progressive."

The City of Mexico possesses many delights for the northern visitor, but there is one drawback mentioned by a correspondent which is rarely referred to. He says: "For the first two days I was a little troubled for breath on this lofty plateau (2,000 feet higher than the top of Mount Washington), and my lips were dry and my throat parched; but my lungs have now become accustomed to the rarified air, and by taking outdoor exercise only in the morning and evening and drinking a little claret and a good deal less water, I succeed in being very comfortable."

A scientific physician says: "In the morning there is an acrid state of the secretions, and nothing is so well calculated to correct it as peaches, apples, etc. The small seed fruits, such as figs, blackberries, raspberries and strawberries, may be classed among the best fruits and medicines. The sugar in them is nutritious, the acid purifying and the seeds laxative. We should look more to our gardens for our medicines and less to our drug stores."

It is not fair to charge workingmen with being low in their tastes or with preferring the saloon, and the beer-hall, and the tavern, until they have had the oppotunity to educate themselves. The success of the workingmen's Sunday concerts in New York ought to be the starting point for similar efforts in other cities, and it only needs a trifling generosity on the part of our wealthy men to repeat the success. The rich have their Sunday service in churches to which the poor cannot afford to go. Let the poor have their service also, and what better service can they have than good music on the only day of rest they have?—Chicago Tribune.

The origin of attar of roses is said to have been this: To please a voluptuous monarch his favorite sultana caused his bath in the palace garden to be filled to the brim with rose water. The action of the sun soon concentrated the oily particles floating on the surface, and the attendant, supposing the water to have become corrupt, began to skim it for the purpose of taking off the oil. The globules burst under the process, and emitted such a delightful odor that the idea of preparing this beautiful perfume was at once suggested.

In an article by Charles F. Thwing on "Gifts to Colleges and Universities," published in the Bay State Monthly, it is stated that the amount contributed to college and university education in the United States during the past ten years is $35,622,000, and since 1874 the total amount given has not been less than $50,000,000.

Personal Gossip.

Grant smokes a medium-strength cigar, which he imports from Cuba. He talks while smoking, never lets a cigar go out, and smokes the stub on a wooden toothpick. Sherman smokes nervously, and is always relighting his cigar. Sheridan enjoys a quiet smoke, but can't do anything else while he is smoking. Butler rarely lights a cigar, but carries the wrong end in his mouth. Logan smokes only at long intervals, but when he smokes at all it is incessantly.

It is well to be posted in the French names of some of the brand new shades which fashion has introduced. "Gris" is a steely drab shade. "Shauvette," a shade of drab beige. "Armande," a delicate salmon yellow. "Isard," an ashes of rose or pinkish beige shade. "Champignon" is a yellowish soft drab, or, as its name suggests, a mushroom shade.

Judge Dickey, of the Illinois Supreme Court, shed tears when, on the Shiloh battlefield a few days ago, he told the three hundred Union veterans around him how the husband of his daughter, General Wallace, was killed near the spot then under foot. During the battle Mrs. Wallace, approaching to join her husband, met a messenger, who told her of the General's fall.

style, and who recently cast them aside and went to live in a wickiup with a Piute buck, has repented of her passion for savage life. Recently, after drinking bad whiskey all night, he arose in the morning and began to beat and kick her. She escaped to town and has once more donned the garb of civilization. Perhaps it would be a good thing to send her east as a lecturer on the beauties of savage life.

The present wife of the emperor of Germany was not his first choice. The lady whom he wanted to marry was the Princess Elizabeth Radziwill. The latter returned his love to the highest degree, but she was much too noble minded to accept the sacrifice of his hand, and, in a last interview with the prince, she besought him to release her. She went into a nunnery, and Wilhelm wedded Augusta, but their married life was not for many years a very happy one. It is only since the different attempts on the emperor's life that their relations have become warmer, and on those occasions the empress always spent many hours daily near the bedside of her husband.

PHYSICAL DEVELOPMENT.

How to Get it, and How to Keep in Good Condition.

Detroit News.

"What do you do to keep in such good condition? I suppose you keep up your gymnastic work all the time."

This remark was made by a Detroit lawyer between thirty and thirty-five years of age to a man a year or two his junior. The former looked pale and delicate, and he stooped a little. The latter had a rosy complexion, was as erect and lithe as an Indian, and looked the picture of robust health. The lawyer had just been "sizing up" his acquaintance and admiring the firmness of his muscles. They were co-workers in Allen's gymnasium a number of years ago.

"No; I haven't seen the inside of a gymnasium for five or six years. But I commenced so young and laid such a good foundation in those years that I have kept my strength, health and activity with remarkably little systematic exercise ever since."

"I wonder if that's the reason my physical development hasn't lasted me better? You see I didn't commence until I was 24 or 25, and though I worked up and maintained a good development during my two or three years in the gymnasium, it left me when I quit, and my muscles are as flabby now, and my chest as flat, as before I commenced going to Allen's."

"I guess you've struck it. The time for a man to lay a good foundation of physical strength and endurance by means of systematic and intelligent exercise is between the ages of 18 and 24 years. This is the time to expand the chest, before the bones become set too hard, to get the heart and lungs used to accellerated action, and to put all the vital organs into such fine condition that they will do work continuously for years without repair. Let a person get a muscular development in the arms, the shoulders or the legs in those days, and he will retain it for years with but a trifling use of those members. I know a man in this city who has the finest pair of thighs I ever saw on a man of his size. In fact, his thighs are so large as to be out of proportion to the remainder of his body, and they are as hard as blocks of wood. He was drafted into the German cavalry service when 18 years old, and should have served seven years. He was a Pole, and didn't like the Germans, and at the first opportunity, after serving five years, he deserted and came to this country. He attributes the unusual development of his thighs to those five years on horseback."

"But haven't you taken any exercise since you left the gymnasium?"

"None regularly. I've been out in the air as much as I could, though my business has been mostly indoors. I walk considerably, both regularly and frequently, and often when I get undressed for bed I go through our old calisthenics in my bed-room, with the window down. Then I rub myself and polish the skin until it is all aglow. Then to bed and to sleep; no nightmare after that, you bet."

Extension of the Russian Empire

The star of Russian empire is taking its way east in a manner very unpleasant to Englishmen. According to a paper lately read before the Royal Asiatic Society the Russians are displaying remarkable activity on the Caspian and Black Seas, and have so managed matters that a corps d'armee might be well on the road to India before the movement attracted much attention, England having no consular agent in either place. Baku is a rising Caspian port, which is attaining notoriety for its remarkable petroleum wells. This has led to the collection of a large fleet to convey the kerosene to various parts, and, to the astonishment of the Russian Government, they have thus an unlimited number of steamers which could in twenty-four hours transport the corps d'armee to Michaelovsk, on the eastern shore of the Caspian. From this port there is already a railroad to Kizildavat, a distance of 147 miles, and from the latter place to Askabad, 185 miles, there is a road, and a railway is proposed. Thence to Sarakh is 185 miles, and from the last-named place to Herat is 202 miles, and a Russian surveyer has already surveyed the entire distance and proved that a line can be easily made.

DR. EVANS.

Gossip About the Millionaire Dentist of Paris.

So Charles Howard, the millionaire of Vermont is to leave $1,000,000 to his niece, Mrs. Evans, the wife of the rich Parisian dentist. Truly the Bible saying holds good, "to him that hath shall it be given."

Evans is already several times a millionaire, and this will be a qretty addition to his fortune, which is increasing at the rate of hundreds of thousands yearly. It is generally supposed that he made the most of his fortune filling teeth. But this is a mistake, as the following talk with one of the oldest dentists in the United States, a man who was years ago connected with one of the imperial courts of Europe, will show:

"Dr. Evans," said the gentleman, was born in Lancaster county, Penn., and he started life as a jeweler's apprentice in Lancaster, the same town in which Buchanan began life as a young lawyer. After learning the jewelry trade he went to Philadelphia and there in some way got into dentistry. Before he knew much about it he took a notion to go to Europe, and got letters from the College of Dentistry at Baltimore to Brewster, who was then the leading American dentist in Paris. Evans was a money making fellow and very plausible. When he called on Brewster, Brewster saw he was bound to make his way anyhow, and fearing if he did not employ him Evans would hurt his trade, he entered into a partnership with him. The conditions of the contract were that Evans should work for Brewster three years at a nominal salary, and at the close of that time Brewster should go out of the practice and leave it to Evans, and he was bound thereafter not to practice within three leagues of Paris. Afterwards he found that Evans was working entirely for himself and not at all for him. He would spend hours on a filling, making it shine and finishing it up beautifully at the expence of the office. Then Brewster tried to break the contract, Evans fought him in the courts and beat him. And Brewster was thus crowded out of Paris.

"When did Evans become Court dentist?"

"I don't know the time. He says, I understand, that he was filling Eugenie's teeth when Louis Napoleon came to his office for some dental work, and that here the two met, and from that meeting afterward sprang their marriage. Napoleon owed much to Evans in many ways. You know he saved the life of Eugenie one night as she left the Grand Opera House, and an attempt was made to assassinate Napoleon by throwing hand-grenades. He afterward aided Eugenie in escaping to England and went with her in 1870. At this time everyone else had deserted the Empress, and she fled to Dr. Evan's house. The doctor's wife was at the seashore, and Eugenie, dressed in Mrs. Evan's clothing, was passed off by Evans as his wife, and driven in his own carriage to the Norman coast. Thence they got a boat to England.

"Dr. Evans," this gentleman went on, "is worth several millions, and he has a grand palace in Paris. His office practice in the Rue de la Paix nets him probably $60,000 a year, but this is not how he has made the most of his money. When Napoleon was President of the Republic he was quite poor. He died very wealthy, and much of his money was made through Evans. Napoleon knew what action was going to be taken on public matters, and he also knew how this would affect stocks. If he could use his information in buying and selling he could make large sums easily. But it would not do for Napoleon to be connected with a broker. There must be some trusty go-between, added to a safe banker. Evans, I am told by good authority, was the go-between, and his position as dentist enabled him to do it to the best of his advantage. He had access to Napoleon at all hours, and he was the only one who could take precedence over the Cabinet and every one else. He attended him at his toilet at 8 o'clock in the morning, and was on as close terms with Eugenie as with Louis Napoleon.

"One day Eugenie said to him: 'Dr. Evans, at 11 o'clock to-morrow an order will be issued withdrawing the French troops from Rome.' Evans at once went to the broker and invested in certain securities which he knew would be affected. At 12 the next day, after the order was issued, these securities went up like a shot, and Evans made $60,000. Of course, Eugenie came in for her share for her pin money.

"Dr. Evans," continued this gentleman, occupied this position during all that time when Baron Haussmann was improving Paris, and he and Napoleon made great sums in speculating on the advances in property to arise from the changes. When the avenue de l'Imperatrice was to be laid out, Napoleon, taking down a drawing, showed Evans certain property and told him to buy it. Evans did so and this in a few days after was worth from thirty to fifty times the amount Evans paid for it. I suppose that he and the Emperor afterward divided the profits.

"But Dr. Evans' practice alone amounts to a great deal. He has dealings with many of the courts of Europe, and though I do not consider him a good dentist, still he has that reputation, and makes a great deal of money. When Napoleon was on the throne it is thought he acted as Napoleon's diplomatic agent in a quiet way on the pretense of his trade. Going, for instance, to Russia, the rest of the world wondered what Louis Napoleon and the Czar was up to. He received from the sovereigns in Europe diamonds, jewelry and pictures for the work he did them, and his house is filled with beautiful things which came from his practice.—Washington Corr. The old gentleman said, "Harry, who is this girl Robert refers to?"

"Miss Lockwood, the daughter of a man you know very well."

"Are you going to marry her Harry?" said the Judge.

"I have some notion of it, father," said Harry.

"Well, wait until I go down and see her," said the Judge, and picking up his old white hat and cane the Judge quietly ambled down to the hotel and asked for Miss Lockwood. She innocently came to the office of the hotel with her dining-room apron on, and seated herself beside the Judge. Just what he said to her, or she to him, will never be exactly known, unless she tells it; but when the Judge came out he was smiling and appeared mighty well pleased. He went home and found Harry still sitting on the porch where he had left him. By this time the Judge's face had resumed its usual grave but kind expression.

"Well, Harry," he said, "that is a very nice girl down there, but she has no money. We must raise her some."

The old Judge put down his memorandum for $50,000, the mother and the others for $25,000 each, and this $150,000 was placed in the bank to the exclusive and immediate credit of Miss Lockwood; the engagement was announced, the wedding day fixed, the marriage took place, and Harry Packer got the girl he liked.

IN THE LAND OF DIXIE.

How a Southerner Asks You to Step Up to the Bar and Take Suth'in.

I don't say that a true southerner would be mortally offended if you refused to drink with him, yet when he invites you you sometimes feel that the invitation comes right from the heart and you feel mean not to accept. Don't imagine that he walks around hunting for somebody to swallow liquid in chorus with him. His invitation comes only after you have sat down with him and had a chat on old times and future prospects. He is shy of you at first. You can feel that he is sounding you and trying to make an estimate of whether you will do to tie to. By-and-by he warms up and does two-thirds of the talking. Further on he hitches his chair a little closer. Then he grows confidential, and first you know he taps your arm or your leg with his finger to emphasize his remarks. An invitation to drink is not far off. I have watched it in a hundred cases, and I never knew it to fail once.

"Yes, sir," he says—"yes, sir, I was in that very fight you speak of, and my brigade was on our left flank. I tell you, it was hot. You Yanks were down behind a ridge, and it seemed as if every one of you had a sixteen-shooter. Along about——. Say, lets have something."

But I started to tell you how a Southern man drinks. Almost invariably he takes a straight whiskey. Your beer is waiting while he pours out his hair lifter. He raises his glass, surveys the contents for five seconds, and then with a nod and a mumble in which you catch the word luck, he seems to throw the whiskey down his throat in a lump. He never stops to taste, nor smack, nor dilute, but down it goes as if he had not a minute to spare, and you are left with two-thirds of a glass of beer in your hand. He'll settle the score, wipe off his mouth, chew up two or three kernals of coffee, and consult his watch before the last of your glass is gone, and you can't help but feel that you are trespassing upon his valuable time.—Nasby.

SOUTHERN LANGUOR.

A Northern Woman Bears Testimony to the Enervating Air of Florida.

Florida Letter.

"Yis sir," she said, with an emphasis that brought every man out of the strictly American position which he had gradually assumed to one better adapted for sudden flight. "Yis, sir; you'r mighty right! Look at me!" We looked. "I came down here ten years ago—not for my health. Bless you, no. I never had a sick day, and energetic—my! well, I wish sometimes that my poor husband—my first, I mean—could have lived to see me now. Maybe he would have lived if I hadn't hurried him so"—and she gazed meditatively into space. "Well, I came down here for pleasure, and the first thing I did was to fall in love with an orange grove; fool, wasn't I!" she demanded of her audience, who stirred in an embarrassed way, for there was still so strong a trace of "energy" in her eye that the possibility of being "hurried" like No. 1 made answering ticklish business. "Well, I married that orange grove," she went on, "I always speak of the grove, for the man I got into the bargain didn't amount to much; poor fellow, he can't, just as you say, sir, he can't hardly git enough life from the air to live on, much less amount to anything. An what's more, I'm gittin' just like him for all the world. Why, I haven't got enough energy to shake with the chills. It's a fact. I've lately taken on dumb ague. Same way with the cattle. We've got some good pasture, but you don't reckon those cows are goin' to waste all their strength browsing around after grass. Not a bit of it, they save it all up, they save it all up so's they'll have enough to chew their cud after they've been to the house three times a day for their rations. Oh, I tell you you northern folks don't know anything about the south for livin'. Why, just look at apple trees! They act the fool the first two or three seasons—just the downright fool. They seem dazed; they don't any more git through bearin' than the sun commences callin', callin', and out comes the new blossoms and new leaves, an' so they keep on an' keep on, till they don't know whether they're apple trees or evergreens, and bimeby they get tired tryin' to find out, and lay down an' die. Yes, sir. You're just right, the South has got to git its livin' by doin' something that don't take no great amount of either brain or muscle." And as the boat sheered up to a dilapidated landing, the ex-widow was received in the lank arms of the orange grove in question, and her audience settled down to cogitate on the resources of the South.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Home Matters.

Painted and stained floors are growing in popularity.

Japanese screens and panels are much used for decorative purposes.

The finest plain white damask is coming in fashion again for the table.

A buttermilk bath for mildewed articles, afterwards placing them in the sun, is recommended.

Old-fashioned rag-carpet is to be seen on the floors of some of the kitchens in some of our fashionable houses.

Brass poles are used for stair-rods. They look effective over a handsome carpet, but are difficult to keep clean.

Sweet Omelettes, which are only the plain omelette jelly or jam spread over it before it is rolled, should be dusted with fine sugar at the moment of serving.

Home Cake.—Rub well into a pound of flour half-pound of good beef dripping; add one-quarter pound of sugar and one-quarter pound of currants; then one tablespoonful of brewers' yeast. Mix as bread, but do not knead; let it rise till light, and bake in a quick oven.

To make the ebony stain for furniture or mantels, use tube oil, blue-black for staining unvarnished wood. The dull tint gives the surface required, and is very different from the shining and varnished effect of jet black paint. If the color sinks in very much, as it will on soft woods, repeat the process.

The cheap palm-leaf fans are very much used for screens, being covered with drawn plush, satin, or cretonne to form a bag, finished off with small pompons round the edge at small intervals, and a large satin bow at the base of the handle. They are sometimes hung up against the wall by the side of the fire-place, handle upward, and hold a half-opened Japanese fan fire-screen, or any little odds and ends.

The Short Rows.

A Vermont dairyman says a young calf should be fed three times a day. Overfeeding at long intervals, and especially with cold food, kills a good many valuable calves.

A writer in Hygiene Pratique states that boots and shoes may be rendered waterproof by soaking them for some hours in thick soap water. The compound forms a fatty acid within the leather, and makes it impervious to water.

"Don't forget the dust bath for the poultry. This is made by nailing together four boards in the form of a square. No bottom is needed. Place in a sunny corner and fill with dry loam or road dust, with an extra barrel full to use when needed. There is nothing equal to a good dust bath to keep the hens free from lice. If they are very lousy a bushel of wood ashes may be added to the bath.

In windy localities, says J. J. Thomas, good screens of evergreens on the exposed sides of the cattle yards have the three-fold advantage of ornament, comfort to the cattle, and economy in feed and in saving flesh. This kind of protection from wintry winds, with its great saving and little cost, is so important that there appears to be no excuse for its ommission by any farmer.

A correspondent says that young horses should never have shoes imposed upon them until it is well proved that they cannot do without them. He predicts that the day is not far off when some humane benefactor of his kind and horse-kind will produce a breed of horses having such firm, tough feet in addition to all other good qualities.

The negroes of Sumter county, Ala., have a farmer's club in successful operation, with some very practical features worthy the consideration of white folks. If any member fails to attend properly to his team, or keep his fences in repair he is fined from $1 to $10, and the money is collected out of the first proceeds of his crop. Membership in such a club would prove expensive to a good many white farmers.

Window Boxes.

Among the numerous plans for the coming summer made by the great army of flower lovers all over the broad land, I hope many have included one, two or more window boxes. It can be said in their favor that they offer one of the easiest methods of gardening, and one of the prettiest forms of out-door decoration; and to the large class, who, through ill health or many cares, are debarred from the ordinary flower garden, they are especially suitable. They give also rare chances for richness of tone and harmony of color, and an artist's work may be as plainly visible in a well-filled window box as in many more pretentious things.

I was especially struck with this latter fact, one day, last summer, when before the windows of an old farm house I saw so beautiful a combination of form and color that I stopped and begged permission to examine closely. The brackets that held the window boxes were fastened in place with large screws; and could be easily removed, and the boxes made of unpainted pine nailed together. Up each side of the window was a rustic ladder, made by fastening a slender cedar stick about four feet long in each corner of the box, then tacking bits of twisted mossy branches irregularly back and forth till the desired height was reached; then longer pieces formed an arch over the top. In one box a white abutilon formed the center piece, with scarlet geraniums and sweet breathed heliotropes on either side, while delicate maurandyas, with their dainty leaves and blossoms, twined around and over the rustic supports. Then, mingling with the stronger growing German ivy, senecio scandens fell in long festoons from the arch above. Bulbs of oxalis deppi, which had been tucked in here and there, furnished abundance of prettily marked leaves, and the outside of the box was completely hidden by a perfect mat of othonna, tradescantia, German ivy and dew plant. The other box had a large, double, purple fuschia in the centre, with white geraniums on either side, surrounded by quantities of mignonette and the same charming confusion of drooping vines. These boxes were sheltered by a veranda, but had an unlimited supply of sunshine during the middle of the day, and were perfect marvels of luxuriant growth.

Begonias are among the most suitable plants for this kind of gardening, and the tuberous-rooted varieties reduce the labor to a minimum. A box on my own veranda, last summer, contained our of the latter, while Maderia vines clambered over the lattice work of slender willows to the ends, and wreathed the upper part of the window with their own peculiar drapery of green leaves, and faintly sweet flowers. A quantity of variegated periwinkles completed the effect. On the approach of cold weather, such a box can easily be removed to warmer quarters, gradually dried off, and then placed in a frost-proof room or dry cellar until the following spring.

A collection of fuchias, half a dozen different kinds, in a large box is also a charming, and unlike specimen pot plants, they can be left to their own devices, and neither trimmed nor trained.

For a good-sized box no vine is more desirable than the cobœa scandens, and it is easily grown from seed. Two little pots filled with moist earth and placed side by side in an empty match box, the spaces around them tightly packed with wet moss, the seeds planted edge down, the whole covered with a pane of glass, set in a warm place and not watered, have year after year started beautiful little plants for me. After the seeds have germinated, they ask little favor of any one, and their rapidity of growth is something marvellous.

Nothing adds so much to the chams of the rich, glowing colors of foliage plants as a judicious mixiure of ferns, and some of our native ones are quite equal to the greenhouse varieties. Taken up in early spring before the fronds have begun to unroll themselves in the sunlight, and put here and there among brilliant coleus or crimson dracænas, they will grow and thrive either in shade or sunshine, and lend grace and beauty to their surroundings. Rustic boxes filled entirely with ferns, and wild grasses, and draped with mitchella vines, may deck a sheltered veranda all summer, and then do duty at a north window as ferneries all winter.

Cyperus alternifolius, also, though usually recommended for Wardian cases, will give charming effects among bouvardias or abutilons in a largo window box, and sweet peas and mignonette are always acceptable. Sweet peas must be covered three or four inches when sown, or the vines will soon turn yellow and droop away without a single blossom.

In regard to the size, shape and ornamentation of the boxes much will depend on the plants chosen. For strong, quick-growing ones, depth of soil and plenty of root room are required, while for the lower-growing and delicate ones shallow boxes are more desirable. One thing bear in mind; no art can decorate equal to the forms, colors, shadings, intricate loopings and draperies of healthy vines and flowers, so there is no necessity for elaborate ornament in the box itself; it should always be subordinate to the plants therein. The soil should be light and rich, and the supply of water must be ample.—Vick's Illustrated Magazine.

Early Pig Pasture.

What is it best to sow for an early pasture for pigs, the coming summer, on a prairie soil newly broken?

Ans.—It is not advisable to pasture some grasses at all, or to pasture very early, the same season the seed is sown; but the best you can do is to sow four pounds of Orchard Grass, six pounds White Clover, four pounds Kentucky Blue Grass and 12 pounds Red clover seed to the acre. To this you might add three pounds of Northern Red Top. The White Clover is very early and is closely followed by Kentucky Blue Grass and Orchard Grass. Harrow the ground well and brush in the seeds. If you can do this just before a rain all the better. All the seeds mentioned may be sown together in the early spring. You might sow a patch of rye for pasture to ease the grass, but the success of this you can best determine for yourself.—Rural New Yorker.

Growing Celery.

From the Western Rural.

We are asked to give directions for the cultivation of celery. Sow the seed in the open ground as soon as the ground is fit to work. The ground should be level and the soil mellow and rich, and it is better when it is being thoroughly pulverised, which it ought to be, to mix it with short stable manure. Sow in rows eight inches apart, using one ounce of seed to every twenty feet of row. After sowing roll or pat down with a spade. As soon as the plants appear hoe lightly between the rows, and pull out the weeds as soon as they are seen. As the plants advance in growth cut off the tops—perhaps twice before planting—as that process induces a stocky growth and plants treated thus suffer less in transplanting. It may be planted any time from the middle of June to the middle of August, but little is gained in planting before July. Prepare ground, and plant on a level surface with rows three feet apart and the plants sixteen inches apart in the rows, if it is a dwarf variety, five feet apart if of the large varieties. Firm the soil about the plant, especially if it is dry. After planting, nothing need be done for six weeks, except to run between the rows with a cultivator and keep the plants free from weeds. About the middle of August begin to earth up to blanch up what is wanted for use in September, October and November. Draw the soil up about the plant with a hoe and firm it about it, so that the leaves shall be in an upright position. Then draw more dirt up about the row. A plow may be used for this purpose. But the blanching process is completed only when the soil is taken from between the rows and banked up to the top of the plants on each side.

Management of Swine.

How can we best manage our present crop of hogs during spring and early summer, and how can we get the earliest green feed for them, as corn is scarce and dear?

Ans.—Hogs which have been wintered, will not only live, but thrive on grass or clover pasture. They can be kept along on such pasture without other food until spring grain is ripe. Peas are the best feed for hogs, and these will be ready in about 2½ months after sowing. Barley is next best of the spring grains, and will mature sooner than the peas. Early sweet corn can be utilized to good advantage, to be followed by later varieties, and fed stalks and all, and the hogs will eat it with great relish. There are more fattening properties in sweet corn-stalks than most people suppose. With the above auxiliaries hogs may be kept growing through the summer, and be fattened without any corn. Young pigs, however, will require something more than pasture. Wheat middlings, or ground oats with the hulls sifted out, and slightly fermented, will make the best kind of food for pigs. The hulls of the oats are excellent for the calves or cows. If sows are suckling pigs, they will require additional food until the peas or barley are ready for them. The hogs may be turned into the peas, and thus harvesting and grinding will be unnecessary. Wheat might take the place of corn, and if ground entire in small quantities it will be excellent food for swine.—Rural New Yorker.

When to Sow Clover.

I see an inquiry in your paper as to the time to sow clover seed. I was glad to see some one raise the discussion on clover. I will give my experience of forty years, and what I have gathered from others I have talked with. My facilities for knowing have been somewhat better than those of most farmers, as I have been selling a seed sower for the last ten years. From what I can gather, about the 15th of April is the best time, if the season is favorable; if not, sow later, when the ground is dry and cracked, and before a rain. I don't sow on a snow or in the moon, but on the ground when out of the way of frost. By this plan a man won't miss getting a stand more than once in five or seven years, but if he sows early and the seed germinates he is a goner.—Indiana Farmer.

Caution in Regard to Seed-corn.

D. S., Ionia County, Mich., writes: "For 15 years there has not been a season so bad for ripening corn as that of 1883. It is estimated that 150,000 bushels of seed-corn will be needed in the State of Wisconsin alone, owing to the failure of the corn to ripen. Similar conditions prevail in all corn-growing states, and probably not one farmer in fifty has saved corn that is fit for seed. Every one should to-day test his seed-corn by placing several average samples between folds of moistened flannel and if it does not germinate then look sharp for corn that will grow or the result will be hundreds and thousands of dollars of loss to the farmers and millions to the country. Look sharp, too, for corn of the best varieties which ripened in 1883. So far as I can learn there was only one variety that ripened perfectly in this state the past season. Also procure a pure, fixed, and distinct variety which has been thoroughly tested, and which is an extra early and not a hard, flinty corn.

How Jay Cooke Recovered His Losses.

When Jay Cooke was buried under the Northern Pacific Railroad his friends thought he would never recover. To-day he is one of the wealthiest men in Pennsylvania. He was over to New York during the week and I learned that he has investments in iron, coal, gold and silver mines and railroads reaching far into the millions. He is a trader by nature, and in trading got his first recovering step after his disaster. A gentleman well acquainted with him in former days in Philadelphia, now a resident of Portland, Ore., tells me Cooke made $40,000 in less than a month in his business venture after the crash. He was no sooner discharged from bankruptcy than he secured backing from friends, and bought of the receiver 40,000 shares which he held of Northern Pacific common stock. The price paid was $1.50. He sold it within thirty days at $2.50. Among the assets there was also a large amount of stock in the South Mountain Ore company, operating a mine in the iron mountains in Adams county, Pa., including a railroad twelve or fourteen miles long. This is the same vein and quality of ore as the great Cornwall vein in Lebanon county adjoining. Lebanon county has as much ore in her mountains as the whole state of Missouri, and the Adams county venture was only second to it in quantity. This stock Cook bought up, held a while, reorganizing the operations at the mines, and then sold out at great profit. Next he turned his attention to a bit of silver mining property in Utah, known as the Hock Horn Silver Mining Company. It was considered "wild cat" and "dead duck." He prospected it carefully, opened up the mine, got a railroad run to it, and before he got through with it was $500,000 better off with only a year behind him in time. Nearly all his later business ventures have been measureably successful, but in these three projects, undertaken just after his failure, he was wonderfully prospered.

The Life of a Harvard Student.

From the Boston Globe.

College students study with all sorts of incentives. A few study all the time, when they are not sleeping and eating. They are ambitious to lead their class, or at least to get an average of 90 per cent. for their four years, or they depend upon winning a scholarship of $250 to carry them through, and so are often obliged, by reason of their only ordinary natural ability, to "dig" constantly for high marks. Another and a larger class of men are content with an average of 86 per cent. and do not care to grind for a degree with the highest distinction. They are fellows of good parts who usually take what course they like—Harvard students, remember, can study almost what they choose after the Freshman year—and who work faithfully every day. Men do not care, or do not think they are able, to graduate with great distinction, study hard enough to get an average of 75 per cent. for their four years, and get degrees with distinction. They, as do all kinds of students, sometimes pick out soft courses, so called, and seldom hurt themselves with work, though they are far from being loafers. All these men would consider a course a failure, if they didn't get "on the rank list" in it; that is, if they didn't get 70 per cent of it. About 100 men, I should say, in every Harvard class of 200 average below 75 per cent in their studies. Abc

CROOKSTON, - MINNESOTA.

Doctor Tanner, the renowned Minnesota faster, has been lecturing at Cincinnati and elsewhere on temperance. He never was a favorite in Minnesota on account of his crankish proclivities, but there are many places where his eccentricities are regarded as indications of remarkable genius.

The steamer Bear has already sailed for the icy North to the relief of Lieutenant Greely. Whalers on the northern coast stimulated by the offer of $25,000 reward, may reach the imprisoned expedition first. But if Greely and his men are rescued, it matters not who the rescuers are. It is gratifying to know that with reference to Greely the Government has done its entire duty. It is predicted that next year an expedition will be fitted out to go in search of the Bear.

The latest reports from the winter wheat regions are favorable for a full average yield on an increased average. It is too early yet to say much of spring wheat though it looks well further south. It is to be hoped that the guessers will withhold their exact figures of the aggregate of the yield for a few weeks at least, for such figures are almost worthless, and serve no other purpose than to discourage fair prices for the product.

The bill in the house for governing Utah by a commission with large powers, the ostensible object being to crush out polygamy, has been defeated in committee, and it is quite evident that no violent or radical measures will be appointed by congress. While polygamy is denounced on every side it is not behind that measures that may savor of persecution, or that may be interpreted as such, are the wisest that can be adopted. Too many gentiles are more anxious to strike mormonism as a religion, than polygamy itself.

The Toronto Globe credits many young Canadian woman with the good sense of no longer regarding domestic service as woman generally seem to believe, and prefer the drudgery of the kitchen to the drudgery of the factory. The result of this change of feeling is that good domestic servants can be obtained at moderate weges, for plain cooks, range from $8 to $10 a month, and the house maids from $6 to $8. If Americans girls could be made to see domestic service in the same light these Canadian girls do, they would be better fed, better clothed, better housed and happier.

Gen. Badeau recently resigned the office of consul general at Havana. The reason of his resignation is a pecuniary one arising out of a difference of opinion between himself and the ungenerous United States government over the matter of compensation. According to the accounts of the treasury Gen. Adam Badeau is indebted to the government to the amount of $9,718.50 for fees received as consul general at London, and nearly the same amount for fees received as consul general to Havana. He has frequently been called upon to settle this deficit, but has refused to do so, claiming that he is entitled to them as a part compensation. Unless Mr. Badeau settles shortly a suit will be brought against him by the government.

The complaint is made in New York that the abolition of tolls on the canals in that state has failed of the effect expected of it, through the extortionate charges for elevator service at Buffalo and New York. These elevators are owned or controlled by the railroad companies and they make the charges high enough to more than neutralize the benefit of the abolition of the tolls. The repeated tolls amounted to a charge of $400,000 a year upon the canal commerce; but it is said that the elevator tax amounts to $4,000,000 a year on the grain trade of the state. The canal interest is worse off, therefore, than before. It is asserted that the railroads have injured the canal business to such an extent that it is no longer done as a profit, and the boatmen are gradually becoming impoverished and disheartened, and if the legislature does not interfere to regulate the elevator charges, the water route competition with the roads will come at an end as effectually as if the Erie canal were drained, and every one of its 4,000 boats lay rotting on its banks.

Professor Peabody, of Illinois, alluding to the fact that a very large proportion of the arable lands once offered for sale by the General Government are absorbed by railroads, settlers or speculators, says: "Long before the next thirty years shall have ended, the United States will not have for sale a single acre of land which a farmer could afford to take as a gift, in comparison with Illinois land at fifty dollars an acre." This statement has a great deal of probability in its favor if it is not exact truth. Before the Jeannette committee Melville was asked if he said anything about poison or had any poison with him on the retreat. He said he and Dr. Ambler frequently talked about the proper course to be persued in an emergency, and arrived at the conclusion that under no circumstances was anything like cannibalism they determined to take cyanide of pottassium and put themselves out of the way. As a matter of fact, however, they left the vessel in haste and took no poison with them.

Railroad Rumblings.

General Superintendent Egan, of the Canadian Pacific, has received a telegram from the Thirty-third Siding stating that there are between 3,000 and 4,000 Chinese who wish to work on a railway as laborers. They have had experience on Union Pacific, Northern Pacific and Onderdonk contracts. They are a first-class lot of laborers and are certain to give general satisfaction. The white population east of the Rockies have long complained of the employment of Chinese labor on railway construction, and it is not improbable that the engagement of such a large number of Celestials will lead to serious disturbances.

The mob captured the Hill boys from the guard at a hotel, took them to the place named, fastened a half-inch cotton rope around their necks, threw the other end over a convenient limb and pulled the men up. They confessed to a series of murders and terrible crimes. After the confession Rev. Stump was asked to pray. When religious services were over, stout men took hold of the ropes and pulled the bodies of the two Hills three feet clear of the ground, fastened the ropes and returned to the village, leaving the bodies dangling in the night air. They were left hanging two or three hours and then cut down, taken to the village and placed in an undertaking establishment, where they were viewed by hundreds of people. They did not die game, but were heard asking for mercy.

The Republican Convention.

After a short campaign all the delegates to the Republican national convention have now been chosen, and their status, as nearly as can be ascertained, is shown in the following table. Many are classified "unknown," for the reason that they have expressed no preference for president and are so stoutly claimed by the friends of the various candidates that they cannot, in fairness, be ranked among the supporters of any. Of the scattering, Connecticut has 12 for Hawley, Indiana 6 for Gresham, Maryland 1 for Grant, and Wisconsin 1 for Gen. Sherman. Virginia will send a contesting delegation of Blaine men.

STATE REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

Minnesota Elects Ex-Gov. Davis, Senator D. M. Sabin, Hon. D. B. Gould and Hon. C. A. Graves, to Go to Chicago.

Nominations of Presidential Electors—Lower Tariff and Bi-Metalism Endorsed.

The Minnesota State Republican Convention was called at St. Paul, Thursday May 1, it was called to order, by Gen. McLaren, chairman of the Republican State Committee. D. D. Searles of Stearns nominated J. B. Sanborn of Ramsey for temporary chairman, and Levi. Nutting of Rice county nominated Z. B. Clark of Swift. It was ordered that the vote be by call of counties, when Col. Sleeper of Crow Wing suggested that he understood Mr. Clarke was willing to withdraw in the interest of harmony. He evidently understood wrong, as Mr. Clarke did not withdraw. Col. Bobleter of New Ulm and Capt Bean, St. Paul, were chosen assistant tellers, and the vote proceeded amid much interest, as it was regarded as the most complete test of respectful strength possible to secure. The result was: for Clarke 157; Sanborn 113—Clarkes' majority 44.

When Clarke ascended the platform Mr. Clarke was brief. He thanked the convention. Said he wasn't in the habit of speaking, and would "endeavor to preside in the interests of peace and harmony and James G. Blaine," and this brought forth tremendous cheers. H. A. In the Afternoon.

Chairman Clarke called order, and, after a few minutes, secured it, though caucuses of two or three continued with unabated energies. Gen. McLaren announced that rooms for the entire Minnesota delegation, alternates included, had been secured at the Grand Pacific, Chicago, and requested that the various districts send names and postoffice addresses of the delegates to him, that he may forward them to the national committee in Washington. SUBSTITUTES AND CHANGES.

McLeod county delegates failed to present credentials, but were admitted. L. H. McKusick of Pine was admitted on motion of Loren Fletcher. George S. Canfield was substituted for C. F. Kindred of Crow Wing. George D. Rice and Oscar Daggett were both admitted from Benton. Grant county was allowed three delegates as accredited, C. M. Stevens being the third delegate. As to Itasca county, the point was raised that the credentials were all in the handwriting of one man, including the substitute of G. G. Hartley for A. M. Burns and William Wakefield. Hartley was, however, permitted to cast two votes. Mr. Sampson was authorized to cast the vote for Beltrami, and the report as amended was adopted, without dissent.

R. B. Langdon, from the committee on permanent organization, reported in favor of making the temporary organization permanent, which was agreed to.

PLATFORM OF PRINCIPLES.

Gen. John B. Sanborn then presented, as chairman, the result of the deliberations of the committee on platform and resolutions. The report was read by the secretary, and was as follows:

The Republicans of Minnesota, in convention assembled, declare anew their adherence to the political principles heretofore proclaimed by them, and which have received the approval of the people of the United States in six successive presidential elections. We believe in the national supremacy of the government which has secured the preservation and unity of the republic, developed its resources, stimulated its industries, augmented its wealth and population, and placed it in the front rank of nations. We believe the government to be clothed with permanent authority for the regulation of all matters of national concern, with power to guard its own life and protect its citizens in the exercise of their civil and political rights. We regard it as the first duty of the government to secure to every voter in every state the right to cast his ballot freely and without fear, and to have the same honestly counted; and we denounce all laws passed, as in the case of certain Southern States under Democratic control, with intent to thwart the will of the majority of legal voters as a mockery of free elections, violating the integrity of the ballot-box, and striking at the foundation of republican government. The enactment of such laws, and the employment of favoritism and frauds in the conduct of elections whereby certain states are ruled by minorities in defiance of the fundamental rights of the people, are a scandal to politics, and deserve the signal condemnation of every honest and fair minded man.

THE TARIFF.

We advocate tariff laws which, while furnishing necessary revenue, shall favor the labor and industrial enterprises of the country, and not assail them. While we insist upon a reduction of customs duties because of dangerous surplus in the treasury receipts, at the same time we deem it essential that this reduction should be made with the least injury to the labor and manufacturing interests of the country. We are in favor of the fullest discussion in congress of the tariff, and commend the action of a majority of our representatives in agreeing thereto, while we cannot fully subscribe to the provisions of the Morrison bill as it now stands in the house because it fails to reform any inequalities of taxation, disregards the business wants of the country, and if adopted would cripple many industries, and at the same time would probably increase revenue. We also recognize in the progressive changes in industrial conditions a necessity for an investigation of the tariff upon a scientific basis, to the end that it may be considered as to its real influence upon labor, capital production and revenue.

THE CURRENCY.

We believe in bi-metallic gold and silver standard and the continued coinage of those metals into money without limitation, but upon the basis as to the weight of the coin of each, of the intrinsic market value of these respective metals in the parts of the world, and we favor the issuance by the treasury of gold and silver certificates equal in amount to the surplus of the gold and silver in the treasury on the basis of intrinsic value, whether coined or uncoined, and of the redemption and cancellation by the treasury of all other evidences of debt hereafter issued for or designed to circulate as money as fast as such gold and silver certificates are issued and are available for that purpose, to the end that all promise to pay, and all paper issued by the government to circulate as money, may represent intrinsic value and not stand upon a simple obligation to issue other like promises on paper on the demand of the holders. We favor the restriction of the power of congress over the legal tender money of the country by such amendments to the constitution as will guarantee that the only full legal tender money coined in time of peace shall be of gold and silver possessing equal intrinsic value.

CIVIL SERVICE.

We rejoice at the improvements in the civil service which have been accomplished through laws enacted by a Republican congress, and faithfully executed by a Republican president, in spite of persistent opposition of the Democratic party, and we insist that the practical administrative reforms already gained shall be continued and extended in the nation and promptly applied by law both to states and cities, until the highest efficiency, economy and integrity shall have been secured to the public service. We record our sense of the eminent services of President Arthur, whose able, faithful and dignified discharge of the duties of the executive office, to which he was called under trying circumstances, has secured to him the cordial esteem, not alone of his party, but of the country.

BLAINE THE CHOICE.

Having full confidence in the capacity and integrity of our representatives to the national convention, we feel assured that they will act together for the best interests of the country. We believe that Hon. James G. Blaine is the choice of a large majority of the Republicans of Minnesota for president, and while thus expressing our preference as a state and as a convention, we pledge the state with its old time majority for the nominee of the Republican national convention, whoever he may be, and demand as their candidate for president a man of proved fidelity in public life, and whose relations to party are such that all its members can heartily unite in his support.

APPORTIONMENT AND THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

We believe that the present apportionment to states of votes in the national convention unjust, and the convention requests the coming national convention to provide that in all future national conventions the representation shall be proportionate to the Republican votes cast for president in the last preceding presidential election. We approach the national election with well-grounded confidence in the success of the Republican party. We believe the people who have so often condemned the Democratic party because of its recreancy to public honor, its inability to discern the right and its hostility to public welfare, will not place the federal administration under control which involves financial, industrial and commercial peril. The Republican party has been and still is a party of progress and constructive power. It has furnished a record of unparalleled and beneficent achievements, and we believe the people will continue to repose a confidence in its wisdom and integrity, and will extend its trust of executive power. We deprecate in the highest degree the failure of congress to pass an act prescribing the manner of returning, canvassing and declaring the vote cast for or by electors for president and vice president of the United States and determining all contests pertaining to the same, and we consider the obstacles placed in the way of such legislation by the Democratic party as a menace to the peace and prosperity of the country, which must be averted by overwhelming majorities and the decisive triumph of the Republican party at the polls.

H. L. Gordon of Hennepin requested the rereading of the section referring to James G. Blaine. It was reread and again followed by applause. The committee's report was then adopted amid a chorus of ayes, followed by three noes.

[illegible]

Next in order was the nomination of delegates at large. Mr. Ward of Waseca: I take pleasure in announcing to this convention my choice for two of the delegates to represent the Republicans of Minnesota in the national convention and will name two of the best men we have—Cushman K. Davis of Ramsey county (vociferous applause) and the Hon. D. M. Sabin of Washington county [illegible] by acclamation [illegible] amendment the addition of the name of Col. Graves of Duluth. [No! no!]

A delegate protested against the amendment. He said that mutual concessions had been made, by which it was understood that Messrs. Sabin and Davis were to be unanimously supported as the candidates of one side of the house.

Jacob Austin withdrew the name of Mr. Graves temporarily.

F. E. Searle of Stearns county offered a resolution that the election of delegates shall be by ballot; that each ballot shall be for the whole number of delegates to be elected, and that a majority of all the votes cast upon any ballot shall be necessary for an election. (A voice—That won't do.)

Mr. Gordon of Minneapolis—

I move an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Waseca (Mr. Ward), changing the order of names—that this convention elect by acclamation the Hon. D. M. Sabin and Hon. C. K. Davis. D. M. Sabin is one of our senators in congress; the Republican national committee has honored him by making him its chairman, and he is to-day the representative Republican of this state. I think, in view of this, that he ought to be named first in the motion. I have no objection to Cushman K. Davis, [applause] but I have an objection to placing D. M. Sabin's name second.

Mr. Ward—I have no objection to the amendment. The Hon. D. M. Sabin has not only said he was willing to go to Chicago with Mr. Davis, but that he was willing that Cushman K. Davis should go there as chairman of the delegation.

Mr. Fletcher—I am authorized by D. M. Sabin to say that he made no such statement. It is a misapprehension of fact. I know he wouldn't deny making the statement if he had done so.

Mr. Ward—I was told this by an honorable gentleman.

Mr. Fletcher—Mr. Sabin has said that he has made no such statement in the last thirty days, and has given no such intimation.

Mr. Ward—Then the conference to-day was misled.

Mr. Fletcher—Mr. Sabin said that it was in conversation a long time ago that he made these remarks about Mr. Davis. What he said then had no bearing upon or pertinence to this occasion.

Mr. Ward—It is for the delegation to decide who shall be its chairman. I have accepted Mr. Gordon's amendment to my motion.

SABIN AND DAVIS CHOSEN.

The question was then placed before the convention and Hon. D. M. Sabin and Hon. C. K. Davis were together chosen delegates to Chicago, by a rising vote, only a few scattering delegates rising on the negative side of the question.

Mr. Austin then renewed his nomination of Col. Graves.

Mr. Nutting of Rice county—

I then wish to present the name of a gentleman from Southern Minnesota. I believe that the voting portion of this state lives somewhat south of this line, and I think we are entitled to one of the delegates next to be elected. I present to you a name of national reputation—known from Maine to California, and I ask this convention to endorse it. That is the name of Hon. Mark H. Dunnell. [Applause.]

Mr. Ward seconded the nomination of Mr. Dunnell.

Mr. Austin—I call on every Blaine man and every C. K. Davis man in this convention to vote for Col. Graves. There is an element here that is opposed to James G. Blaine, and a strong element that was opposed to C. K. Davis' going to Chicago; and because the Fifth district proposed to go in against them, they proposed to slaughter Col. Graves of Duluth. Col. Graves has nothing to do with that contest, and I want to have every man of the 150 that were in that gathering this morning stand by Col Graves.

GOULD AND OTHERS NAMED.

Mr. Randall of Winona then placed in nomination O. B. Gould.

"A gentleman of known integrity, and a Republican of wider fame than I can explain to you."

G. H. Johnston of Detroit nominated C. F. Kindred. If the convention sees fit to send Mr. Kindred to Chicago, he said, it will go a long way toward harmonizing the little unpleasantness that exists in the Fifth district and result in sending a full, solid delegation.

Ex-Lieut. Gov. A. Barto seconded the nomination of Mr. Graves, and presented that gentleman's claims. He comes from a district, he said, which furnishes a greater Republican majority than any district in Minnesota, and is backed up by a majority of the delegates of that district.

Mr. Lind of Brown county placed in nomination S. D. Peterson of New Ulm. The nomination was seconded.

Col. Sleeper of Crow Wing county seconded the nomination of Mr. Kindred. He claimed that Col. Graves did not represent a majority of the Fifth district, as had been claimed by his supporters.

Mr. Gordon of Minneapolis presented the name of ex-Gov. Pillsbury. Mr. Gordon said that Mr. Pillsbury had not asked to be sent to Chicago, but that his friends were all anxious to send him there.

Gen. McLaren then moved that the convention proceed to ballot for two delegates. He accepted an amendment to ballot for one delegate, and the motion as amended was adopted.

The vote was given as follows:

Candidates.	Votes.	Candidates.	Votes.
Gould	91	Kindred	[illegible]
Dunnell	40
Peterson	43	Total	263
Graves	60
Necessary to choice			13[illegible]

No one was elected, therefore, as was to have been expected.

THE SECOND FORMAL BALLOT.

Amid disorder doubly dire, the secretary commenced to call the roll of counties, and Chairman Clarke, at intervals of ten seconds hammered vigorously with a big pair of shears—the only mallet accorded his high office. Good humor was in the ascendant, however, the noise proceeding from the hundreds who felt that they must say something or explode. Again the individual caucusing proceeded vigorously, the Graves leaders Barto, Austin, et al., being particularly active, and Lind, Peterson's man, coming in for a good share of attention. In less time than was consumed in taking and counting the first the second was concluded, and the result announced as follows:

Graves	232	Peterson	1
Dunnell	1	Total	26[illegible]

Necessary to a choice—135.

C. H. Graves was declared the unanimous nominee. Mr. Storbeck, Meeker, moved a committee of thirteen to nominate a state central committee. Mr. Gorden, Hennepin moved to amend by continuing the present committee for one year. Mr. Waite of Stevens moved to lay on the table, which was done. Mr. Lind of Redwood wanted to know whether the candidates are for Blaine or against him. Mr. Gould took the platform and said he had heard from the convention, he had heard Blaine's name go up in shouts. He asserted positively that if he (Gould) was elected to Chicago he would vote for Blaine as long as Sabin, Davis or Graves, all three understood to be for the Maine statesman. Loud cries for Dunnell were made and that gentleman, amid great applause, strode upon the platform. After speaking of high personal regard for Blaine, Mr. Dunnell elaborated thus:

You all know how deep a place he has in the affections of the American citizens. This state, as four years ago, is imbued with enthusiasm for this man. He is the choice of the majority. As my friends have said, if I should be elected a delegate to Chicago, I should not dare, nor should I, hesitate to express my preference for the recognized choice of this convention. I wish to say in addition to this, that President Arthur has brought the Republican party up to this grand hour by a wise and judicious national administration. [Applause.] I am glad that this convention has honored itself and the state by recognizing the eminent services of our president. Of the other candidates I have nothing to say; but we live under a democracy—under a representative government; and the man that goes out from this convention should go carrying with him the sentiment of the people whom he represents. I only want one result, and that is that our standard shall not be allowed to trail in the dust. If I was to go to Chicago I would seek to represent your sentiments there. If, on the third, or fourth, or fifth ballot, it should become evident that Mr. Blaine was not to be nominated, I would work for the next best man—let it be Arthur, or let it be Edmunds. I would go to that convention with a patriotic purpose and with a determination to do you no dishonor. [Applause.]

S. D. Peterson was the next, and said he had always been a Blaine man and would stay so as long as he was alive.

BALLOTING FOR THE SOUTHRON.

The third ballot was next called for, the same confusion prevalent which seems inseparable from the writing of delegates' names on slips of paper. There was a good deal more uncertainty as to the result than upon the casting of the former ballots, as no one was at all prepared to say positively how the result would pan out as between Gould and Dunnell. The size of Graves's vote showed that both the Southern factions had given him support. Ramsey's and Hennepin's delegates were almost entirely for Gould. A crowd gathered around the counting table, and when the tellers, during the count, announced "Gould, 84; Dunnell, 84," there was a whisper all through the hall. The vote was then announced:

Gould ... 133 Scattering [illegible]
Dunnell ... 89 Total [illegible]
Peterson ... 47

Necessary to a choice [illegible]

Loren Fletcher suggested that Gould [illegible] named the choice of the convention, but [illegible] Peterson [illegible]

Thanking my friends who have so well stood by me, I withdraw my name, and ask my supporters to vote for a solidly Blaine man, not one who has been converted at the eleventh hour. [Cries of "Name him! name him!"] I mean Mark H. Dunnell [heavy cheering].

DECIDED AT LAST.

The Gould men worked hard on the Peterson delegation, recognizing that if Peterson's 47 went to swell Dunnell's 89, the total would be the necessary 136. But up to the moment of the announcement of the vote no one knew whether Winona or Owatonna was to be honored. There was less confusion because men were more deeply interested. Dunnell paced slowly up and down one of the side aisles, while quietly conversing with Sinclair and others of his friends. There was a rush toward the platform when "Yellow Medicine," the last county on the roll, was called, and the result of the count claimed attention to the exclusion of everything else. Here it is:

Gould.....150 Dunnell.....11[illegible]
Scattering.....1
Total.....26[illegible]

The result was received with hearty applause, but no motion was made to make the election of Gould unanimous.

Mr. Strobeck of Meeker moved a committee of thirteen to appoint a state central committee. Agreed to. Mr. Flower of Ramsey moved a committee of thirteen to name an electoral ticket and four alternates. Mr. Dunnell of Steele wanted separate committees for electoral ticket and alternates, but the original motion prevailed. The importance of the matters yet to be attended to was impressed upon the delegates, and all were urged to remain. The chair named the following as the committee on the state central committee:

C. H. Strobeck, chairman, Meeker, Twelfth; H. M. Donaldson, Kittson, at large; A. H. Max, Dakota, First; W. B. Dean, Ramsey, Second; F. T. Boardman, Hennepin, Fourth; D. E. Morrison, Olmsted, Third; M. H. Dunnell, Steele, Fifth; C. H. Smith, Nobles, Sixth; F. P. Van Holsen, Douglas, Seventh; Liberty Hall, McLeod, Eighth; S. D. Peterson, Brown, Ninth; T. J. Sheehan, Freedom, Tenth; W. W. Hartley, Cass, Eleventh.

Committee on electoral ticket and alternates, M. D. Flower, Ramsey, chairman, Second district; Marcus Johnson, Kandiyohi, at large; Z. W. Peterson, Goodhue, First; W. H. Fetter, Wabasha, Third; Loren Fletcher, Hennepin, Fourth; W. H. Kelly, Steele, Fifth; A. M. Crosby, Nobles, Sixth; C. J. Sawbridge, Otter Tail, Seventh; T. D. Strait, Scott, Eighth; John Lind, Lyon, Ninth; C. R. McKenney, Fillmore, Tenth; O. H. Lucker, Polk, Eleventh; Gorham Powers, Yellow Medicine, Twelfth.

REPORTING THE NAMES.

After nearly an hour spent in consultation the committee on state central committee reported the following:

H. A. Castle, Ramsey, at large.
First District—D. T. Chamberlin, Dakota.
Second District—M. D. Flower, Ramsey.
Third District—M. J. Daniels, Olmsted.
Fourth District—C. H. Pettitt, Hennepin.
Fifth District—L. Nutting, Rice.
Sixth District—F. A. Day, Martin.
Seventh District—H. C. Waite, Stearns.
Eighth District—W. J. Ives, McLeod.
Ninth District—Joseph Bobleter, Brown.
Tenth District—W. P. Sergeant, Freeborn.
Eleventh—E. G. Jones, Becker.
Twelfth—Charles H. Strobeck, Meeker.

On motion of Loren Fletcher, the report of the committee was adopted. Chairman Flower then submitted the following report of an electoral ticket and four alternates:

ELECTORS.

C. F. Kindred, Crow Wing.
J. G. Nelson, Washington.
J. D. Allen, Mower.
W. B. Dean, Ramsey.
L. O. Thorpe, Kandiyohi.
A. D. Perkins, Cottonwood.
Peter Rauen, Hennepin.

ALTERNATES.

C. D. Wright, Otter Tail.
W. G. Ward, Waseca.
M. O. Hall, Yellow Medicine.
L. P. Fluke, Dakota.

H. Steenerson of Polk moved to insert the name of S. G. Comstock for that of C. F. Kindred to head the electoral ticket. He did not receive a second, and the motion was not considered. E. G. Ingersoll of Ramsey moved to adopt the report. Mr. Warne of Blue Earth objected, and claimed that his county had been ignored. Mr. Steenerson insisted on his motion to substitute Comstock for Kindred, and said any arrangement made by leaders would not be sanctioned by the people of the Fifth district. George H. Johnston of Becker said that the nomination of Mr. Kindred would settle all difficulties, and that the contesting delegates from Moorhead, in case Kindred was retained as one of the electors, would not appear at Chicago as contestants. Steenerson's motion was decidedly sat upon and heartily lost. The Blue Earth question caused considerable discussion, and was finally settled by substituting the name of J. A. James of Blue Earth as alternate for M. O. Hall of Yellow Medicine. The reports as amended was then adopted. It was decided that Sabin's alternate is Wright; Davis', Ward; Graves', James; and Gould's, Fluke. To make all things serene the electors and alternates were chosen by acclamation. The state central committee was empowered to fill vacancies, and the covention adjourned after a continuous session of four hours and thirty-five minutes.

Of the electoral ticket, C. F. Kindred, Brainerd, formerly lived in St. Paul, was assistant land commissioner of the Northern Pacific, is a large land owner in Dakota, and is at present engaged in railroads and cattle ranches.—J. G. Nelson of Stillwater is a member of the lumber firm of Long & Nelson, is an old settler and a wealthy and prominent man.—J. D. Allen is a hardware merchant in Le Roy, Mower county, has served two terms in the lower house of the legislature, and has been in Minnesota many years.—W. B. Dean is a member of the wholesale firm of Nichols & Dean, St. Paul, came originally from New England, and is one of the capital's foremost residents.—L. O. Thorpe is cashier of the Kandiyohi County bank at Willmar, is a Scandinavian by birth, well known and respected throughout Northern Minnesota.—A. D. Perkins is an attorney of Cottonwood county, has been in the state senate and once lived in Plainview, Wabasha county. He is an old settler in the state.—Peter Rauen was born in Germany, but came to St. Anthony (now Minneapolis) in 1856. He is a general merchant and a Republican prominent in local circles.

AIMEE'S GIFT.

Lulu Cameron was the most unselfish mortal, or she never would have stayed at home from the steamer excursion, to which Gerald Rogers had invited her, simply to wait upon her little sick sister Aimee.

She had looked forward to the day with such evident pleasure; had pleased herself with the thought that her boating costume would be just the suit to wear, and that it was most becoming to her; and not the least of her enjoyment would be the fact that Gerald had invited her instead of May Blanchard or Alice Allbright, her former schoolmates who were madly in love with the bright and genial clerk, who was home from the "big city" on his summer vacation.

But poor little Aimee, who had been an invalid from birth almost, was Lulu's idol, and her increased illness had so worn upon her patient mother, that Lulu, as much as she had anticipated from the day's enjoyment, had now scarcely a thought beyond the meek little sufferer, whose contracted features told but too plainly of the pain she endured.

And so Lulu put from her mind the thought of the possible pleasant excursion, simply sending Gerald a brief note explaining why, and hoping he would have an enjoyable time. Then she busied herself to soothe Aimee, taking her in her arms and rocking her so tenderly in the great, easy rocker, singing quaint little lullaby songs till the weary look vanished from the tiny face, and the breathing became more regular. But Lulu still held her little charge, feeling that after all it was better to do as she was doing, than to be enjoying herself otherwise while her weary mother was laboring at home. The thought of Gerald, and May, and Alice, would intrude at times, and the mild beauty of the summer day occasionally served to arouse just a little sigh of regret, which she tried hard to quell, and at last succeeded, thanks to her good mother's teaching, who had always striven to impress upon her children that self should be but of secondary importance where duty was concerned.

As Lulu still sat there, singing softly, a gentle rap was heard at the door, which her mother, who had just entered the room, hastened to open, and who should it be but Gerald with a bunch of great white, fragrant water-lilies, fresh from their home in the lake's clear depths. And Aimee, who had awakened from her refreshing sleep, breathed in their sweet perfume with such evident thankfulness, that all the little circle was benefitted. Aimee, who knew how much pleasure her sister had anticipated from the excursion, asked Gerald in her innocent way why he did not go alone, but he kissed her pale little lips, and told her it was because he preferred to spend the afternoon with her, adding, that word had just been received that the steamer had run aground on one of the numerous lake islands, and could not possibly be home before the next morning.

So after all Lulu passed a pleasant afternoon, and Aimee, with the variableness of her flattering disease, declared that she was almost well.

The following days brought strenght to the wasted form, and an easy carriage ride with her "dear sister Lulu," and friend Gerald, occasionally through the summer, helped her more than medicine. But the tiny form which they lifted in and out of the phaeton was not destined long to be with them, and with the approaching winter weather a change was soon noticeable. The widowed mother, Mrs. Cameron, felt that her darling was going home, and but for Lulu would have sunk under the added grief. As Christmas drew near, Aimee, when able to talk, would inquire if Gerald had come yet, it being his custom to spend the holidays in his native town. When Christmas Eve was closing around the little family, Aimee again asked her mother if Gerald had come just as a brisk step was heard on the crackling snow at the door, as if in answer to her inquiry. When the salutations were over, and the pretty Christmas gifts were shown, Aimee's were found to be just what she wanted. A beautiful white dove from Lulu so tame that it would rest upon her finger, a little dainty dressing-gown from her mother, and a lovely music box which played several of her favorite tunes from Gerald, made her the happiest one of the family.

When Gerald asked her what she was going to give him, she, in the fullness of her heart, could only offer her most prized treasure, "sister Lulu," but with the proviso that he would not take her until she was "done with her." And though each, by some mysterious means, had long since learned love's sweet lesson, they felt after that strangely sad betrothal by Aimee's dying bed, as if they belonged more truly to each other than ever before.

When Christmas bells rang out at early dawning, Aimee, the fair wite dove, was enfolded in her pure white robe, for she had passed quietly away to that blessed land where heavenly music fell softly upon her listening ear.

In after years, when Lulu was the wife of Gerald, he always called her his "Christmas gift," for had not Aimee given her to him almost with her dying breath? And there is not a happier household in the whole town than is that of Lulu Rogers. Mother Cameron makes her home with the devoted couple, singing cradle songs to a sweet [illegible]

The court holds that the phisiological experiments in question constitute a branch of instruction given by the state, and that M. Pere Sanson, one of the many distinguished public executioners of France, whose ancestors had been in the same business for many years before him, said, when speaking of his aids: "I exact an irreproachable morality from my assistants, and above all Christian faith. The condemned man is upon the scaffold; the priest speaks to him of eternity and of a God who pardons and awaits him. It is becoming for us all to unite with the chaplain, at least as far as our attitude is concerned. It would be indecent for the patient to perceive a smile of incredulity or mockery on any of our lips. But if you only knew how difficult it is to find religious assistants! This is why I am dissatisfied, and why I so often change my coadjutors."

The venerable Bronson Alcott, aged 86, the primate of the Concord philosophers, who has been very ill for several months, is marvelously "recovering" and is now so much better that his friends report him as "able to converse freely."

Mrs. Maurice Barrymore—she that was Georgie Drew—was discharged from the Modjeska company for a very amusing reason. It seems that on a recent occasion Mme. Modjeska purchased an elegant new pair of silk leggins, which she wore that night as Viola in "Twelfth Night." Mrs Barrymore had not seen these leggins, and when she came upon the stage she was so much fascinated by their beauty that she literally feasted her eyes upon them. This made Mme. Modjeska very nervous, as she imagined Mrs. Barrymore was guying her; in fact, the madame became so queered and hoodooed by Mrs. Barrymore's close scrutiny of her shapely legs and new leggins that she came very near breaking down in her lines. The result of it all was that Mrs. Barrymore was discharged for unprofessional conduct, despite her expostulations that she meant no wrong. The whole circumstance strikes us as being one of the most remarkable experience the history of the stage affords.

A Dream That Did Good.

The Danbury (Conn.) News is responsible for the following "premonition" story: "F. S. Olmstead has for years had business dealings with the late President Seeley, and had a strong personal attachment for him. On Sunday night, the day before the funeral, he dreamed that he and Mr. Seeley were standing on a floor which gave away with them. In the struggle to save himself he was awakened. The dream made a strong impression upon him, and after eating an early breakfast he hurried to the house of his dead friend, and without disturbing the family found his way into the cellar. He felt that the dream might possibly be a warning, and he was moved to examine the supports to the floor. He found that a very large beam, which supported the floor timbers of the parlor and a partition wall was cracked. The crack appeared to be a fresh one, and a closer examination with a lamp showed that it was so large that one's hand could be placed in it. Mr. Olmstead immediately got two heavy posts, and in a short time made the timber perfectly safe. This timber is thirty feet long, and had no supporting posts. Its great size was supposed to be sufficient to sustain the weight upon it. In the parlor above rested Mr. Seeley's remains. A few hours later the building was filled with friends. Had it not been for the dream it is not likely the broken timber would have been discovered in time to prevent a catastrophe. That this dream was a direct warning to Mr. Olmstead there can be no doubt, but as to the source there will be many differences of opinion.

George W. Cable's Five Children.

From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

George W. Cable, the New Orleans novelist, spent Sunday with friends in Monson, attended the Congregational church, and was invited to talk to the Sunday-school in the afternoon. Mr. Cable's fondness for children is proverbial, and he accepted. In the course of his remarks he raised his hand, expanded the digits, and said: "I have so many children at home. How many is that?" "five," piped up a youngster promptly. "And half of them are girls," continued the speaker, staggering his audience with his apparently reckless disregard of the truth. "How much is half of five?" asked Mr. Cable; "two and a half," reproachfully replied a little miss in the front pew. "Yes," said the novelist, with a benignant smile, as he saw that his reputation for veracity was fast slipping away, "two and a half of them are girls and the the other two and a half, too—five girls." "Oh," gasped the little miss with a look of relief, and then a ripple of laughter bubbled up from the corner where the "bird's nest" class sat, floated over the backs of the pews, climbed into the gallery, and died away in the organ loft.

Self Control.

There is no kind of person so rare as the one who is lord of himself. [illegible]

THE MOTHER-IN-LAW.

"Five pounds of grapes!" said old Mrs. Arnold, in astonishment. "Are you quite sure that you understood your mistress's order, Jane? Hot-house grapes are a dollar a pound, and surely for so small a dinner party as this——"

"There's no mistake, ma'am," said Jane pertly. Servants will soon learn the spirit of their superiors, and Jane knew that young Mrs. Arnold was not particularly partial to her husband's stepmother. "I took the order myself, and it ain't likely I should be mistook."

"Jane is quite right," said Mrs. Evelyn Arnold, who came in at that moment, a handsome brunette in a pink cashmere morning dress, trimmed with bands a la militaire, of black velvet—rather a contrast to the neat, cambric gown which her mother-in-law was accustomed to wear about her morning avocations at home. "And I do wish mamma, you wouldn't interfere!"

The old lady's serene brow flushed.

"My dear," she remonstrated, I do not wish to meddle with your concerns; but I really fear that Evelyn's income——"

"Evelyn's income is his own, to spend as he pleases," interrupted the young lady. "And you seem to forget, mamma, that people don't live nowadays as they did when you were a girl."

Mrs. Arnold said nothing more. It was not the first time, nor yet the second, that she had been given to understand by Mrs. Evelyn that her interposition in the household affairs was unwelcome.

The stepson, whom she loved with as fond a devotion as if he had been her own child, had married a beautiful girl, and settled in the city.

So far, all was well, although Mrs. Arnold had secretly hoped that he would love sweet Kate Lindsay the clergyman's daughter of Merryvale and settle down on the old farm, as his father had done before him.

Yet if Evelyn was happy, she also would rejoice she assured herself, even although he preferred imperious Marguerite Ellerton to Kate Lindsay, and the bustle of the great metropolis to the sweet peace of the vales and glens.

If Evelyn was happy! Yes, there was the question. And sometimes Mrs. Arnold feared that he was not, in spite of his smiles and assumed cheerfulness.

It had been his fondest hope that his step-mother might be one of his household after his marriage, Mrs. Arnold had hoped so, too; but after this, her first visit, she felt the dream was in vain.

"Oil and water will not mix," she said with a sigh. "And I belong to a past generation."

As she left the store-closet, where Marguerite and her cook were holding counsel as to a proposed dinner-party, she went spiritlessly up to the breakfast-room, where Evelyn was reading the morning paper befor the fire.

"Evelyn," she said a little abruptly, I think I had better go back to the Chestnuts this week."

"Mother," he remonstrated.

"I don't think that Margurite wants me here!"

Evelyn Arnold reddened.

"I hope, mother," he said, "she has not said anything to——"

"It is not natural that she should need my presence," said the old lady, gently, "I might have known it; now I am certain of it. Home is the best place for me. But remember one thing, dear Evelyn. Do not live beyond your income. Marguerite is young and thoughtless. You yourself are inexperienced——"

"Oh, its all right, mother," said the young man carelessly. But I did hope that you could be happy here!"

Mrs. Arnold shook her head.

I shall see you sometimes, said she. "If ever you are in trouble, Evelyn—you or Marguerite either—you will know where to come."

So the old lady went away from the pretty bijou of a house in Mayfair, with its bay windows, its portieres and the boxes of flowers in all the casements.

"Marguerite," said the young husband, as he studied over the list of weekly bills a short time subsequently. "I believe my mother was right. We are overrunning the constable, and we must pull up at once or we shall find ourselves in the wrong box."

"Pshaw!" said Marguerite, who was sewing a frill of point-lace on the neck of a rose-colored satin reception-dress, "what has put that ridiculous idea into your head, Evelyn?"

"Facts and figures," answered Evelyn. "Just look here Madge."

"But I don't want to look," said Madge, impatiently turning her head away, and I won't—so there! Of course one can't live without money, especially if one goes into society."

Evelyn whistled under his breath.

"But Marguerite," said he, if a man's income is a hundred a month, and he spends two hundred, how are the accounts to balance at the year's end?"

"I don't know anything about balances and accounts," said Marguerite, with a gay laugh.

"How do you like this dress, Evelyn?" holding up the gleaming folds of the pink satin. "I shall wear it on Thursday evening."

"Do you think, Madge," said the young man gently, "that it is wise for us to go so much into society and keep so much company on our income?"

"That arrow came from your mother's quiver, Evelyn!" said Madge, with an [illegible] bitter cold of January took possession of the frozen world, a vague apprehension crept into her heart.

"Something is going to happen," she said. "I am not superstitious, but there are times when the shadow of coming events stretches darkly across the heart. Something is going to happen!"

And one afternoon as the amber sunset blazed behind the leafless trees, turning the snowy fields to masses of molten pearl, she put on her fur-lined hood and cloak.

"I will go and take a walk," said she. "I shall certainly become a hypochondriac if I sit all the time by the fire and nurse my morbid fancies like this."

She took a long, brisk walk, down by the ruins of the old mill, through the woods, across the frozen marches, and then paused.

"I will come back by the Black Pool," she thought. "It is a wild and picturesque spot in the winter, the icicles hanging to the tree-boughs, and weird ice-effects over the face of the gray rock."

It was a dark and gloomy place, funereally shaded by the old elms, which grew there to a huge size; and when Mrs. Arnold got beneath their boughs she started back.

Was it the illusive glimmer of the darkening twilight?—or was it really a man who stood close to the edge of the Black Pool?

"Evelyn! Oh, Evelyn, my son!"

She was barely in time to catch him in her arms and drag him back from the awful death to which he was hurling himself.

When they reached the wainscotted parlor, where the blazing logs cast a ruddy reflection on the red moreen curtains, Mrs Arnold looked into her stepson's face with loving eyes.

"Mother, why did you stop me?" he said, recklessly. "I am a ruined man! I shall be dishonored in the sight of the world! Death would be preferable, a thousand times, to disgrace!"

"Evelyn," said the old lady, tenderly, do you remember when you used to get into boyish scrapes at school? Do you remember how you used to confide your troubles to me? Let us forget all the years that have passed. Let us be child and mother once again."

So he told her all—of the reckless expenditure on Marguerite's part—his own, also, he confessed—which had woven itself like a fatal web about his feet—of the unpaid bills, the clamoring tradesfolk, the threats of public exposure, which had driven him at last to the forgery of his employer's signature, in order to free himself from one or two of the most pressing of these demands.

And if my investment in the foreign railway bonds had proved a success," he said, eagerly, "I could have taken up every one of the notes before they came due. But there was a change in the market, and now—now the bills will be presented next week, and my villiany will be patent to all the world! Oh, mother, mother! why did you not let me fling myself into the Black Pool?"

"Evelyn," said his stepmother, "what is the amount of these—these forged bills?"

"Two thousand dollars!" he answered, staring gloomily into the fire.

"Exactly the amount in the Three per Cents which your father left me, said Mrs. Arnold. "They would have been yours at my death. They are yours now, Evelyn!"

"Mother, you don't mean—"

"Take them," said Mrs. Arnold, tenderly pressing her lips to his forehead. "Go to town the first thing to-morrow morning and wipe this stain from your life as you would wipe a few blurred figures from a slate. And then begin the battle of life anew."

And up in the little room which he had occupied as a child, Evelyn Arnold slept the first peaceful slumbers which had descended upon his weary eyelids for many a night.

In the midnight train from town came Marguerite to the Chestnuts, with a pale, terrified face and haggard eyes.

"Oh, mother, mother!" she sobbed; "where is he—my husband? He has left me, and the letter on the dressing-table declared that he would never return alive! Oh, mother, it is my fault! I have ruined him! Help me, comfort me, tell me what I shall do!"

Mrs. Arnold took her daughter-in-law's hand and led her softly to the little room where her husband lay quietly sleeping.

Marguerite drew a long, sobbing sigh of relief, and clasped her hands together as if in mute prayer at the sight.

"Hush!" said the old lady; "do not wake him. He is worn out, both in mind and body. Only be thankful that heaven has given him back to you, almost from the grave."

And as the two women sat together by the blazing logs in the crimson parlor, Mrs. Arnold told Marguerite the whole story of the meeting at the Black Pool.

"Mother," said Marguerite, with a quivering lip, "it is my doing. You warned me of this long ago. Oh, why did I give no heed to your words? I deserve it all."

"You will do better for the future, my dear," said the old lady, kindly. "Only be brave and steadfast."

So the young people went back to town and commenced the world anew, withdrawing from the maelstrom of "society," and living within themselves. Mrs. Arnold senior came with them, and Madge, as everyone calls her now is learing the art of housekeeping under her direction.

"Mamma is an angel!" says the young wife, enthusiastically. "And if I could only be just like her, I should have no higher ambition."

A Test of Conversion.

From the St. James's Gazette.

A story of domestic trouble was told at the Woolwich Police Court yesterday, which teaches a useful moral. A wife desired to have her husband bound over to keep the peace. But how had the peace been disturbed? The husband had a simple explanation to offer. His wife neglected her household duties in order to go to hear Moody and Sankey, and the admitted facts certainly indicated that there must necessarily have been some disturbance. For the wife went on Wednesday and on Thursday and on Friday. NOTES FOR THE FARM AND HOUSE.

Condensed Farming Information.

The Country Gentleman says two things are necessary for the growing of good asparagus, namely, plenty of room for the plant to grow and copious manuring. The latter is best applied to thick beds by covering the whole surface with manure two or three inches thick, late in the autumn, and forking it in very early in the spring, before the shoots start. Thick beds, however, should not be planted, but the plants allowed three or four feet each way to each. Three by five is a common and suitable distance, and large stalks may be obtained in this way.

Horse-radish is grown as follows: The ground is plowed and harrowed and marked in rows two feet apart. The crop is grown from cuttings of the small roots, about six inches long, cut square at the top and sloping at the bottom, so that they can be planted right end up without trouble. The cuttings are dropped into holes made with a sharp stick so that the top is a little below the surface, and the soil is pressed about them. The distance is 18 inches apart, and 12,000 roots are thus grown to the acre. The soil is kept clean by plowing and hoeing. A crop of early beets and cabbage may be grown between th rows. The roots are dug up the last thing before the ground is frozen, and put away in pits to be kept warm until wanted in the winter. The small roots are trimmed off and packed away in boxes for planting in the spring.

When the ground gets bare and the birds begin to sing and the grass and flowers start, is the time of all the year that a boy or girl wants to get out in the pastures and woods, wander along the brook or down to the pond, where they can become acquainted with and learn to trust in the God of nature, by seeing how all things are preserved through the winter and started to life at the proper season. People who keep their children at work in the field or kitchen these pleasant spring mornings when they are longing for a stroll among the pleasures which they see and hear, are committing an error which they can never correct. Every day that children are so confined at this season, when they have a longing for something outside of the daily routine, will be a dark spot in their memory, which will last through life.

Do not neglect the garden. Every good farmer will have a small piece of ground where he can raise a few vegetables for his family and perhaps a few for market. Plant a little of each kind as soon as the frost is out of the ground, for early use, but for winter we need not plant till later.

Cucumbers, to insure a good crop, should not be planted till the last of May or first of June. Another thing we should remember, that is to plant a good large piece of fodder corn; then if the season should be dry and our pastures short it will help greatly to keep up the flavor of milk.

A correspondent of London Gardening Illustrated writes as follows: "I formerly had an idea that medium-sized whole potatoes were best to plant, but recent experiments have shaken my confidence in planting whole potatoes. I believe that large ones, cut into single eyes will furnish a better return than planting whole tubers; moreover, and this is of some importance, the crop will be fit to dig at least a week earlier, a circumstance for which a reason is not far to seek, inasmuch as one strong stem from each set is better than a cluster of weakly ones; the former will produce on the average from four to six tubers, whilst the latter will yield a host of small potatoes, in addition, perhaps, to one or two good-sized ones. The crown eyes are better and more prolific than those produced on the sides of the tubers."

Good Ham and Bacon.

In order to get ham and bacon of a superior quality, it is absolutely essential to rear special breeds of swine for the purpose. We have seen Berkshire hams weighing 25 pounds each, or more, which were lined with only about half an inch of fat, the rest being tender, sweet, juicy meat. The side pieces were finely intermixed with fat and lean—of mere threads—and, of course, were also tender and extremely palatable as salted and smoked for bacon. Such meat is more economical than a fatter sort, and far the most healthy, especially in warm weather. The consumption of fat meat of any kind then, is apt to produce too much bile in the stomach, which is often the cause of fever, scrofula, and perhaps some other diseases.

Removing a Cow's Afterbirth.

What is the proper treatment of a cow that retains the afterbirth?

ANS.—The following mixture has been found useful in case of retention of the afterbirth: In one-and-a-half quart of boiling hot water steep one ounce of dry rue or two ounces of green; a quarter of an ounce of ergot of rye and six drams of powdered Savin (Red Cedar) leaves. When it is cooled to a milk-warm temperature strain and give to the cow through a horn or by a bottle, in the usual manner. Follow it in a few minutes by a drink of linseed gruel. Repeat in four hours. If this does not produce the desired effect, amanual operation must be performed as follows: smear the hand and arm with linseed oil; have the nails pared closely; insert the hand back upwards and the fingers gathered together at the ends, following along membranes carefully until the attachments at the cotyledons of the utterus are reached, when each one should be gently pushed apart with the ends of the fingers. One by one these attachments are loosened until the membrances are detached. It is not often that the retention of these membranes produces any inconvenience to the cow, and they gradually slough away during some days; or are absorbed within the uterous. In case this happens, it is well to give the cow one ounce of hypo-sulphite of soda daily for two weeks as an antiseptic to prevent injury from the absorption. This trouble is generally caused by some weakness of the animal.—Rural New Yorker.

Garden Memoranda.

Dig and mellow soil for onions, peas, parsnips, early potatoes, lettuce, etc., as soon as it is dry enough to crumble, even after hard pressure—clay soil requiring longer delay, unless very well drained, or [illegible] make the soil very [illegible]

ed. Earthworms are very fond of the young tops, and will drag the onions loose if not well planted. Lime is odious to them, and can be sifted on if they prove troublesome. Plant very early: many plant in late fall. For peas, prefer soil manured well last year, plant early and late sorts at the same time, and on the first day of dry-enough soil. peas require deeper planting then most seeds—3 to 4 inches. Hoe and stick before tendrils appear, and then a good wide mulch to secure moisture and coolness to the roots will assure a good crop. Parsnips, where room is scarce, are sometimes planted with peas, to make most of their growth after the pea-haulm is cut away, and often do well so, if not over-crowded. But of course they do better with the ground all to themselves. If they throw out side-prongs, it is because either they cannot well penetrate the hard subsoil, or because it contains some corrosive or deleterious quality that cuts off all growth at a certain depth. In many wet or poisonous soils even forest trees have all their roots spread horizontally near the surface, as is seen when they are blown over by the wind. Lettuce, spinach and radishes want a very rich light soil, and water when lacking, so that the growth may be rapid, and the produce tender, succulent and mild in flavor.—Hortulanus.

Carpets.

Changes of fashion occur in our carpets as in our dress. Last year sombre and subdued colors and neutral tints prevailed; now brilliant tints and high contrasting colors are in the ascendant. The reaction in fashionable style of carpets, however extreme, is usually traceable to long operating influnces, and is for manufacturers to discern in advance the tendency of the public tastes. The present patterns of carpets are of an all over description, without central figures. For certain accepted patterns of old standing there is a constant demand, but periodic novelties are the rule.

There is much to study not only in costly but in cheap carpets, of the dainty effects of contrast, as in yellow and orange, with or without light colors, lilac, scarlet and crimson, or white divided by faint blue. Carpets admit of demi-tints, but no shades. Ecru grounds are just now the most popular for the richer description of carpets. The variety of patterns that are turned out allow of the carpets select for the rooms of a house to represent the individual taste of the occupant, and thus on indivdual grounds creating pleasure in addition to the merits they possess as agreeable compositions.

In the way of direction in the choice of patterns, so far as colors are concerned we would state that combination of colors that would not be pleasing in a dress are unsuited for carpets and will never look well in a room. A tailor has made a very effective stair carpet of patterns neatly sewn together, as in patchwork, and edged with scarlet two inches wide. He has taken care to have the patterns all the same size, and they look like thick striped material.

Farm Hints to Spring Diet and Clothing.

With respect to clothing, one needs to consult the thermometer at this season more than at any other in the year. In the middle of the day it may be expedient to throw off some of the clothing which was worn in winter, but it should be resumed promptly with change in temperature. The system cannot endure with impunity abrupt changes from heat to cold in spring as well as it can in the fall. Shut up in the house as we have all been more or less during the winter, the blood hasn't been sufficiently oxygenated, and we have grown tender. Underwear in this climate should not be changed from heavy to light until after the middle of May.

A change in diet is very seasonable. Heavy meats may be largely discarded. Rich puddings and pastries should give place to lighter forms of dessert. Vegetables and fruits are suitable articles of diet, and all the open air one can have should be enjoyed. With a light diet, warm clothing will not be uncomfortable. Put less coal into the furnace and give but little draught, and you reduce the temperature as surely as though you opened doors and windows to cool off. So, feed lightly, and dress warmly during the changing spring weather, and health will be secured. Said a druggist the other day: "It's astonishing how most every kind of medicine will sell. But you see most people eat too much, and these medicines that act on the liver and kidneys and bowels simply help carry off the overplus of food that has been taken. One doesn't need as much carbon to keep up the heat of the body when the mercury stands at 50, 60 and 70 degrees, as when it ranges near the freezing point or drops below zero, and the complaint of want of appetite is only an admission that Nature knows what she is about, and makes light demand when small supply is needed.—N. Y. Tribune.

To Renovate Feather Beds.

Take a pair of cotton sheets and sew them together like a bag, leaving an opening three-fourths of a yard at on end. Then rip open one end of the feather bed, the length of three-fourths of a yard. Baste together the two openings and gently crowd one-half the feathers into the bag. Take out the basting thread and sew up the gaps in the bags. Next put them one at a time into a wash-tub of rather hot, soft water, without soap, and pound lightly. Take out, drain, put through another hot water and drain again, and place them in the open air, sun and dry. Stir them often, and do the work when there is prospect of fair weather, lest the feathers sour in too long drying. You will be surprised at the bulk, elasticity and freshness of the bed, for it will be like new.

Brushing and Cleaning.

I once heard a lady say, "A floor will look cleaner after I have swept it than it will after Cousin Hattie has brushed and washed it all day." I asked her, why, and she replied; "I always sweep the way the boards lie, and in this way I take all the dirt and lint that has gathered in the crevices with the loose dirt, when, if I sweep across the boards half the dirt would be left in the little trenches, and a gust of wind came along, and then it would go flying about as though it had no abiding place. When there is a bed in the room I use a damp broom when I sweep beneath it, till that keeps the fine, downy lint from settling on the furniture. The best way to brighten a carpet is to put a half-tumbler of spirits of turpentine in a basin [illegible] sweep over the carpet once or twice, and it will restore the color and brighten it up until you would think it new. Another good way to clean old carpets is to rub them over with meal; just dampen it a very little and rub the carpet with it, and when perfectly dry sweep over with meal.

Aaron Burr's Pistols.

From the St Louis Dispatch.

Perhaps the most famous and fatal fire-arms on this continent are the dueling pistols of Aaron Burr. They are the property of Innis Hopkins of this city, having been left him by his father, Col. Brent Hopkins, who died at Henderson, Ky., on the 7th of March last. One of these pistols fired the ball that killed Alexander Hamilton at Weehawken. It is identified by a long, deep notch indented on the handle. The pistols were made by H. W. Mortimore of London, England, gunmaker to his Majesty, and were imported by Burr at the close of the revolutionary war. The barrels are thirteen inches long and carry an ounce ball. They are flint-locks, the pans for the priming are lined with gold, and the touchholes are bushed with the same metal. They are hair-triggers, and shoot with great force and accuracy. The locks are pieces of very superior mechanism. The pair came into the possession of Col. Brent Hopkins, through his uncle Col. Samuel Goode Hopkins, of the 42d Regiment of United States Dragoons, who purchased them from Burr in Washington City in the winter of 1813 or 1814, paying $500 in gold for them. The weapons have surely a blood stained history. They have been used with fatal effect in eleven duels. Pettis, of Virginia, killed Biddle on Bloody Island, near St. Louis, with them; Edward Towns, of Virginia, killed a Frenchman near New Orleans; Capt. Sam Goode Hopkins killed a Spanish Count near New Madrid, Mo.; Hugh Brent killed a man from Georgia on Diamond Island, below Henderson, Ky., and they were used several times in Virginia, twice in South Carolina, and more than once in Kentucky, with deadly effect.

The Influence of the Magnet.

For a few pence we can purchase a piece of magnetized steel, and by its help we can learn some very interesting things about it. We lay it upon a table, and above it place half a sheet of smooth writing paper, supported on each side by pieces of firewood of the same thickness as the magnet. A pennyworth of iron fillings will complete the apparatus required. Scattering these iron filings over the paper so as to lightly cover it we shall soon see, particularly if, to aid the process, we gently tap the paper, that the various atoms of iron are arranging themselves in symmetrical curves of great beauty. The two poles are distinctly marked by the greater accumulation of filings over them, and from them proceed splendid feather-like lines which embrace and interlace with one another in a most curious manner. In the whole range of physical experiment there is nothing more beautiful, looking to the simple means employed, than these feathery diagrams of an invisible force; and we trust that our readers will not be content with mere verbal description, which can do such scant justice to the reality, but will produce the curves for themselves. We see here clearly defined the marvelous influence which by some mysterious power will penetrate all kinds of obstacles. We can put this to practical proof by interposing between the magnet and sheet of paper a board a book or even the human hand, when the curves can be made visible all the same. We shall presently see how this strange force is taken advantage of in the articulating telephone.—Science for All.

Bismarck's Birthday.

Berlin Dispatch to the London Times.

Prince Bismarck celebrated his sixty-ninth birthday amid manifold tokens of esteem and devotion. In the morning he was, as usual, serenaded by two military bands, and in the course of the day he received thousands of gifts and congratulotory messages from high and low in all parts of Germany, and, indeed, all parts of the world. Princes William and Henry of Prussia, who are both very warm admirers of the Chancellor, personally called to present their felicitations, and the number of visitors and card leavers was legion. A slight shadow was thrown over the occasion by the illness of Princess Bismarck, who has been confined to bed for some time back. Among the birthday presents received by the Chancellor were the usual 101 plovers' eggs annually sent him by the "faithful ones" of Iver, a village in Lauenburg. At Magdeburg the day was celebrated by the unveiling of a bronze statue of the Chancellor, executed at the cost of a private admirer, and a copy of the one erected at Kissingen to commemorate his escape from the bullet of Kullman. This is at least the third statue of the Prince already set up.

Senator Beck's Dog Story.

Washington Letter.

Senator Beck's devotion to animals is well known. He owns several fine dogs, among them a colley of great beauty. One evening recently there were two ladies passing the evening with the Senator and his family. The beauty and intelligence of dogs formed one of the topics of conversation. The Senator was a pleased listener to several remarkable stories, which he topped off by the following which he said Hogg related in his Fireside Stories (if that is the name of the book): "A Scotchman, like the Senator, patiently waited until the last marvelous story was told and then added his mite. It is said, quoth he, that after long companionship the dog and his master look alike, and this was the case with me and Hector who is now dead. The likeness was so strong that one warm Sunday afternoon when I was more inclined to nap than attending church. I sent Hector in my place. The next day the clergyman called to see me and complimented me upon the attention I gave to the sermon which he had observed amidst a very drowsy congregation, and Hector, who heard him, for fear he would laugh outright, ran out and jumped the garden wall and pretended to be setting birds."

CROOKSTON, Minn., May 8, 1884.

Having received notice, from the Honorable Board of Health of the city of Crookston, to abate what they term to be a nuisance, which consists of a pool that the Creator took six days to make, and said city took two years and six months to put the finishing touches on, and being notified to complete said abatement in twenty-four hours, I would hereby very meekly inquire of said learned Board by what system of machinery said work can be done, and from whom can the machinery be procured or the patent bought?

P. J. LACHAPELLE.

The above refers to an order which Mr. Lachapelle has received to fill a pond which is on his block, and as near as we can come at it Mr. Lachapelle has the best end of the controversy. It seems that the pond had a natural outlet until the city, by grading streets, shut it off, leaving a stagnant pond which the city made into an unhealthy cess-pool by dumping therein manure, rubbish and all sorts of garbage, until it has become unendurable to the neighborhood. We are told that the owners once offered to be at one-half of the expense of filling up the pond if the city would bear the other half and we are further told that the work could be performed for about $150. It seems that the city prefers to stand a law-suit and thus incurring treble the actual expense of filling the pond before she will consent to do what she must eventually do. If we are in possession of the exact facts it seems to us to be a very foolish proceeding. It would seem to us to be the duty of the city to make the best possible terms with the owners and proceed at once to abate the nuisance which, if left in its present unhealthy condition until hot weather, is very liable to cause the sacrifice of valuable lives and hundreds of dollars costs and expenses. In the end we think it will be found that the city will be obliged to bear the whole cost but can she ever pay for the lives which may be lost? The council should take the matter in hand and act promptly.

SILVER WEDDING.

"Ring out glad bells!" and the "glad bells" rang out double-leaded for the 25th anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. I. U. Jennings and Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Jennings, on Tuesday night May 6th. The reception was held in the Knights of Honor hall. The room was beautifully and appropriately decorated and the piano and violin were un-strung for the occasion making sweet music to gladden the occasion. Many and beautiful were the presents that testified the estimation in which the brides and grooms are held by our citizens and all went merry as a marriage bell (as it were) until the wee sma' hours when all wended their way homewards, wishing for many happy returns of the occasion.

The train will leave Crookston at 5:30 p. m. and return after the entertainment. The company know that the people of Ada appreciate a good play and they will do everything in their power to entertain the people of that city.

THE EVENING'S ENJOYMENT.

As everyone expected, the Academy of Music was crowded and overflowing last night, by those drawn there mainly to see John Dillon, as "Pilgrim Boggs." in the play of "States Attorney." Mr. Dillon, is an old time favorite here, and his inimitable acting last night wreathed fresh laurels to his old-time chaplets of popularity. The other members of the company demonstrated that collectively they are a galaxy of stars in their various specialities. The honors were about equally divided between Mr. Dillon as the pettifogging, euphonious and effervescent attorney, and Mrs. Walters, as the sympathetic, frollicking good-natured school marm. The audience was kept busy wavering and changing from uproarous laughter to tears and sympathy. State's Attorney abounds in extremes of character, which affords a pleasant and recreative evening's enjoyment, such as is rarely offered the amusement loving public.—Council Bluffs Nonpareil.

From the Stoughton, (Wis.) Hub we clip the following item which refers to the father of Tom and Ole Bjoin. From it we should judge that tobacco raising was a very profitable business. As the difference in climate is not so very great we do not see why tobacco could not be profitably raised here.

One of the few remaining large crops of Spanish in this section, grown by Holver Bjoin of Utica, was delivered to Andrew Jenson for Friend Bros., of New York on Tuesday. The crop of 18 acres, 48 cases, weighed out 14,082 pounds, which at 24c per pound brought the large sum of $3,379 68. Mr. Bjoin's [illegible] and [illegible] holding off the buyers for months, but consented to take the price named rather than hold longer. The sale only embraced what tobacco was required [illegible]. Had the whole crop been saved it would have amounted to nearly double the sum paid. [illegible]

CROOKSTON AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting was held at the city hall Tuesday evening, May 6th. The meeting was called to order by M. R. Brown. On motion Louis Fontaine was elected chairman, and John McKinnon Secretary. On motion E. M. Walsh was elected President W. W. Topping 1st Vice President, Marshall Filiatrault 2d Vice President, S. F. Markham Secretary, and Alex McKinnon Treasurer for the ensuing year. Directors elected were M. R. Brown, Louis Fontaine, E. M. Walsh, John R. McKinnon and Robert Houston. M. R. Brown spoke in reference to the $500 received from the county and the provision that the grounds should not be sold the matter was considered as also was the question of the old subscription subscribed for in 1883 and not paid. Robert Houston was appointed a committee of one to look after the fences on the fairgrounds. It was moved that the secretary be instructed to furnish a copy of the proceedings of the meeting to each of the papers printed in this city for publication. Motion to adjourn.

A SAD ACCIDENT.

On Wednesday, April 30th Mr. Thor Haatvadt, a former resident of this city was killed by the caving in of a well on his place in the thirteen towns. The well was dug to the depth of thirty feet last fall and left all winter without curbing. Recently Mr. H. sunk it to the depth of fifty-five feet and had got six feet of water. At about 4 p. m. on Wednesday, he went down into the well in a box to curb it up, and had been in about 15 minutes when a portion caved in, crushing him to the bottom of the well and smashing the box in which he was standing into kindling wood. Help was procured and he was got out as soon as possible which was not until Thursday at 1 p. m. though work was constant during the night and day. The well had to be curbed before men dared to go down. Mr. H. was a young man about 30 years old, and was highly repected in this community and wherever known. He was married to a Wisconsin lady one year ago this spring who is thus bereft in early life of a true husband and faithful friend. Mrs. H. will remain upon the claim until she can prove up, when she will return to friends in Wisconsin.

There has been quite a number of Red Lake Falls representatives in the city this week.

We hear that Mr. Dobson's large store building on Second Street is to be occupied soon by a firm from New York with a very large stock of Dry Goods, Groceries & Notions, etc. The parties who are going to put in that large stock have traveled all over the country as far west as Portland, Oregon. Entered at the Post Office in Crookston as Second Class matter.

To The Farmers Alliance of the State Of Minnesota.

You are requested to assemble in State Alliance, in the City of Mankato, on Tuesday, June 10th, 1884, (each Subordinate Alliance being entitled to two delegates) for the consideration of measures arising under principles that bind us together.

During the past few years the few who control and operate corporate monopolies have not only amassed large fortunes by unlawful and oppressive burdens imposed upon the farming community, but have through bribery, and other unjust means, secured legislation in their interests detrimental to the leading industries of the country, and of such appalling character, if not checked, as to undermine the fundamental principles of our government.

It is needless to enumerate in detail these burdens—they are thoroughly understood by you all.

It is a well established principle in our government that the people's rights and duties demand that they should institute measures looking to the abolishment of burdensome, obnoxious and class-favoring laws, and institute new measures and laws having for their foundation such principles as shall be most likely to promote their safety and happiness.

We believe that the railroads and transportation corporations were chartered by State and National law to be for the people's services, profit and happiness, and are in all respects common carriers, and as such should be managed for the good of the people, not as gigantic monopolies, enriching the few from the hard earnings of the many.

We believe that the agricultural interests of the Western and Southern States, forming as they do the vast wealth of the country, and giving employment to the greater part of our people—being more than six-tenths of the voting population—should receive a proportionately large share of the fostering care of the government.

In the State of Minnesota, legislation in favor of one gigantic monopoly was the leading measure of the late session, while needed legislation for the relief of the agriculturalists at large, petitioned for by the people, and recomended by the governor, was purposely and unjustly neglected.

We as farmers are seven-tenths of the voting population of this State, and have within ourselves the power to redress these wrongs, and are the culpable party if these grievances are not corrected.

The earnest and practical work accomplished by the Farmers' Convention, held in St. Paul this spring, being composed of delegates from all sections of the State, fully demonstrates the deep interest taken by the farmers in this movement.

To carry on this work, to more fully perfect our organization, and better inform the people of our objects and aims will be the leading work of the coming State Alliance, and to this end we extend an invitation to representation of all granges, farmers' unions and all other organizations of farmers, as well as individual farmers, where no organizations exists, to meet with us and join in our deliberations.

In the consideration of these principles we now ask you to leave your plow and the busy duties of this pressing season of the year, and meet in convention at Mankato.

Trusting that wisdom and judgement may give guidance to your deliberations, so that not only present good may result, but that we may be able to hand down to our posterity unimpaired that inestimable boom, of a free government "by the people and for the people."

GEO. W. SPRAGUE, President.
GEO. W. HIGH, Secretary.

In accordance with the above circular letter, notice is hereby given that a meeting of the Farmer's Alliance of Polk County will be held at the city hall on Saturday, May 24th at 2 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of electing two delegates to attend the State Alliance, to be held in the city of Mankato on Tuesday, June 10th. President. Secretary.

'ROUND HOME.

Hack & Gallash are painting their store.

The post office building is being repainted.

Mr. Fisk of Ada was at the Commercial last Tuesday.

The finest weather for seeding that ever we saw! So say all of the farmers.

The boys in this city are practicing glass ball shooting, and are imrpoving rapidly.

The new sprinkler started last Thursday. It is a daisy, and holds 700 gallons of water.

Bert Duntley is now in the employ of C. C. Utzinger as bar-keeper. Bert is an A No. 1 boy.

Mr. Tice of Mentor was in the city this week. He gives a favorable report of every thing in that country.

That twenty-four hour time piece that takes so among railroad men is still on exhibition at Berthiaume Bros. jewelry store.

We understand that they had quite a blizzard out at Devils Lake last Monday, it was a little rough around the edges here.

Mr. Durand received a letter from Mr. Barber last Tuesday. He was in San Francisco Cal. He will probably return about June 1st.

The Crookston Brewery is now turning out a first-class sample of the celebrated Bock beer. A sample keg sent to THE JOURNAL office testifies to the truth of the assertion.

There were six persons baptised at the Baptist Chapel last Sunday. This society, we understand, now numbers upward of sixty members.

Geo. Warninger was up from Ada on Tuesday. George is getting his hotel in fine shape and will soon be ready to give the Adaites a first-class house.

A social will be held at the Congregational parsonage Friday evening, May 16th, after which a corn supper will be served in the lecture room every body invited to attend. Supper twenty-five cents.

Charley Vance and Jack Coufair returned from their western trip on Saturday last. They have been as far as Bismark, and they report that they have found no place better than Crookston, if as good. They all say so.

Soren Johnson, of this city, who started for the South about two weeks ago for his health, returned last Sunday. He got as far as Fergus Falls when one of his children was taken sick and he had to stay there several days, and finally returned home. He will make another start as soon as his family is better.

If any one needs an argument in favor of the New Era Grader and Ditcher, he has but to compare the roads they have made with the ones we used to have. Consider, also, that by furnishing good ditches to drain off the surface water early, they make the seeding practically, from ten days to two weeks earlier, and then say, if you can, they are no good!

BEN. S. FOGG, Agent,
Commercial House, Crookston, Minn.

Wm. Near, who has been in business in St. Hilaire for about a year past, met with quite a serious accident last Saturday night. It seems that he sold out his business at St. Hilaire and started with his family for Fergus Falls, his former home. When the train arrived at Glyndon Mr. Near got off of the car and got on to the engine to speak to the engineer, who was a friend of his, and when the train started again he started for the coach, and when he was walking over the tender he slipped and fell, and was struck by the step on the mail car and when he was picked up was thought to be in a dying condition, but later we hear that he was seriously hurt but not dangerously. His many friends will be glad to hear that it is no worse. LATER—Mr. Jenks informs us that his physician reports that he is getting along nicely.

Earnest Kent, formerly of this city and now of Lacota D. T. was in the city part of last week, visiting old friends. He reports things quite lively in Dakota. Ernest now has charge of Mr. John Weeks general store. Mr. Weeks is certainly fotunate to have secured the services of so good a man.

New stock of Fancy Groceries, and Provisions AT A BARGAIN FOR CASH. Call at the Red Star Grocery and see for yourself. [51-tf]

The only difference between the horse that Johnnie Hack bought about a month ago and the turtle that he got last week, is that the horse would not go and the turtle would. No use talking, Johnnie is all right handling horses, but when it comes to taming the fiery mud turtle he gets left. Next one you get Johnnie put a bell on him.

Eleven pounds refined white sugar for one dollar, at the Red Star Grocery. [51-tf]

The Walters Comedy Company played in Erriesson.s Opera House last Thursday evening to a crowded house. John Dillon appeared in the play, "States Attorney" as "Pilgrim Boggs." We will not dwell on the merits of John Dillon for his appearance has been the talk of every body since Thursday evening. Suffice it to say that there is no better actor than he, and the company was one of the best that ever visited our city.

Teas and Coffees, best brands in the city for the least money, at the Red Star Grocery. [51-tf]

W. H. Topping, Johny Hack and Mr. Kidder, went out boat riding last Thursday afternoon, and while on their way to T. B. Walker's saw mill espied a large hard shell turtle on the shore; they rowed to the land and captured him. They brought the turtle home and Johnnie was appointed a committee of one to take care of him, so he took him down to the store put him in a tub of water. The next morning the turtle was gone. We have not heard as yet whether Topping & Kidder are going to commence suit against Johnnie for damages, or how they will settle it. But the boys say this much that Johnie has got to be a little more previous to keep up with a turtle.

Three prisoners escaped from the county jail last Thursday night. On the evening of that day, John Ristow the jailor brought one of the prisoners down town, and on returning he broke loose and tried to escape. John promptly brought his revolver into use, fired two or three shots, and the prisoner was finally captured. When he arrived at the jail the other prisoners seemed to be having a kind of a prayer meeting. They were singing hyms, reading the bible and having a kind of a religious exercise. Every thing seemed all right, but when John returned in the morning he found that they had sawed a hole through the floor and three of the prisoners had escaped. The prisoners were the three who were bound over to the District Court for breaking into a bonded car. As yet there is no trace of them but in all probability they will be recaptured. The fact of the matter is we have got no jail, this matter ought to be looked into. In speaking with one man to day who has been on the Grand Jury several times he remarked that he had recommended a change every time. It is high time that something was done in this matter. The jailor, Mr. John Ristow, has done a great deal better than people could expect any man to do, as he has had some desperate cases in charge and nothing but chaining them up or putting the shackles on them would keep them [illegible]

Peterson's Magazine for June is already on our table: ahead, as usual, of all competitors, and getting better and better, as it seems to us, every month. The principal engraving is a steel one—"Waiting For A Bite"—and is graphic and humorous beyond words. The leading fashion-plate is double in size, printed from steel, and colored by hand. "Peterson" is now the only magazine that goes to the expense of these beautiful affairs. There are also several patterns in the popular cross-stitch, printed in colors, besides nearly fifty wood-cuts of fashions, embroideries, crewel-work, etc. The literary contents are even better than usual. In the humorous line we have a story by "Josiah Allen's wife," and another, "A Rolling Stone," a Virginia dialect one, by Mrs. Sheffey Peters. Mrs Ann S. Stephens continues her capital novelet, "Her Season In Washington," and other love-stories are contributed by Frank LeeBenedict, etc., etc. Really, it is a problem how so good a magazine can be published at so low a price, which is only Two Dollars a year, with great deductions to clubs. A new volume begins with the next number, so that now is an especially good time to subscribe. Specimens are sent gratis, if written for, to persons wishing to get up clubs. It appears to us that every lady of refinement ought to take this magazine. Address, CHARLES J. PETERSON, 306 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The G. A. R. Post met on Tuesday evening and decided to meet every Friday evening hereafter, at their new hall. The Post has rented Lawrence hall for a year and will take possession on Friday evening next.

People walking on Robert Street are very much surprised on looking at Berthiaume Bros. store, to see the elegant display of jewelry, of all kinds, watches, clocks, guns, revolvers, musical instruments etc.

We find that the directors of the Crookston driving park are making arrangements for some good races here before long and bear in mind that if you want a stop watch, Berthiaume Bros. is the place to get it.

W. J. Railey, who runs the new shop on Broadway, built Jenne's tank and Ed Walsh made the sprinkling apparatus. If the way the old thing works is any indication, Ed believes in immersion rather than sprinkling.

Mr. C. A. Chiniquy has returned from a business trip to Chicago, and as soon as all those new goods which he ordered have arrived he will have something to tell the JOURNAL readers. He expects them along about next week.

The Crookston Improvement Co. have platted a new addition and will soon be ready to show some of the finest building lots to the city. They have also staked out a quarter-section in the JOURNAL which they will employ to tell you all about it at an early date.

J. L. Bailey informs our reporter that he is negotiating for the purchase of 50x150 feet on the corner of Broadway and Fletcher Avenue, opposite the new Opera House, and that as soon as he acquires title, he will at once commence the erection of a large hotel. It is an open secret in this city that the man who first undertakes the building of such a hotel as is needed has a bonanza for such an institution is needed and would pay a large per cent on the investment.

In conversation with some of the parties who went below on railroad business, we find that the company who are building the road offer to commence work here in ten days providing our people will give them $75,000 and grounds to build their shops on, and they also say that they will make Crookston the terminus of the road. Some of the parties have not returned as yet, so we dont know what steps will be taken until they get back. But it is safe to say that the people here will make an effort to obtain the road.

The Crookston Dramatic Company went to Ada at 5:30 Saturday evening in their special coach. There was about twenty-five persons in the party. Their reception in that city was very cool, quite cool, that is, almost frigid in its coldness, something so different from what they expected that they were chilled as it were. It's a cold day when the Crookston Dramatic club get left, but it was really cold that day, much colder than what it usually is at this season of the year, even in this cold climate. The fact of the matter in plain words our Dramatic club [illegible] who have worked so hard and so [illegible] to present this drama to the people of this country in a pleasing manner and who have presented the play both in Crookston and Grand Forks and received the warmest congratulations from the press in both cities, go down to the village of Ada and are received by what? Nothing. The troupe from Ada have come here several times and were always met with crowded houses and appreciative audiences. The return for all this was received by our Dramatic society in Ada last Saturday evening. It is [illegible] as yet when the club will [illegible] Ada [illegible]. They are now [illegible]

Swamp lands are at last in the market, and Jennings & McGrew, in U. S. Land Office building at Crookston, are the agents for the sale of the same Prices are reasonable, and terms easy. [1-2]

Mr. McDonell was rash enough to offer to eat all the fish a certain lady in our city could catch, and what was his surprise a little later when the lady entered his store accompanied by a lad who was staggering beneath a load of fish as big as he could carry. The lad deposited about 100 skip-jacks upon the floor and departed amid the applause of the audience and now Mac thinks he will never bet on how many fish a lady can catch in the Red Lake River again.

At Ives Station on Friday last, a stable containing three horses, belonging to John N. Ives, took fire and burned to the ground. The stable was built of poles and straw and burned quickly. It happened at noon, while the men who had been working the horses were at dinner, and before discovered it was too late to save the horses. It doubtless caught from a pile of rubbish that had been burned in the forenoon but how is a mystery, as the fire was apparently all extinguished when left and no wind was blowing. The loss is about $600 with no insurance. John N. while he takes the loss philosophically cannot help but wish he had been wise enough to have had a fine board stable, in which case [illegible] readily.

Henry Kerison the photographer is quite busy these fine days taking photographs of some of the business blocks in this city.

The New Era folks bloom out this week in a new advertisement which tells you where you can get onto good roads. They are making arrangments for a big business this summer.

Knute Nelson came up on Wednesday evening to attend the meeting of the County Board. The Board went over to East Grand Forks this morning to inspect the bridge. They will meet in session to-morrow.

No tidings as yet from the escaped prisoners. No man can succeed in keeping prisoners in a dry goods box. Ristow has come as near to it as any man can, and when he fails it is time for the county to attend to it and build a jail.

Frank Zarracher has rented the Box House which he is re-fitting, re-furnishing all the way through. Frank is one of the most popular men in this county, and is well acquainted with every body, and this house under his management will be one of the most popular hotels in the Red River Valley.

Notice the new ad of Proud & Macdonell in this issue. This firm have now as fine and elegant a stock as you can find in this Northwest, and invite every body to call and inspect the goods and get prices. They may be found at the old New York Store on Broadway.

John McLean returned from Sioux City on Tuesday. He says that the road will come to Crookston sure. The site they ask for is already pledged and he is very sanguine that the balance can be raised which will insure the building of the road. This road would be a spoke in the whee of Crookston's prosperity which she can illy afford to see pass for the want of a little public spirit. We trust that Mac is a prophet.

W. L. Dudley, an artist from Grand Forks, is in the city, and will be pleased to execute portraits in oil, water colors, etc., for any of our citizens who may desire them. THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

Following you will find an article gotten up and sent out by the members of the board of trade to each and every business man in this city. This article asks each and every one to take an active part in getting up a grand celebration in the city of Crookston on July 4th, 1884. There is not a city in the great Northwest better prepared to make a grand display than Crookston. With her mills, machine shops, immense stocks of merchandise etc., etc. Let everybody come to the front and make this the grandest celebration ever held in the Northwest. Let every firm in the city of Crookston be represented in the parade on that day.

CROOKSTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, }
CROOKSTON, Minn., May 15, 1884. }

GENTS:—At the coming celebration, on July 4th, we wish to have you represent your business in the Grand Parade, in any manner you may choose that will be attractive and an advertisement for you. Complete your displays on July 3d. The procession will form on Broadway, commencing at the engine house and extending south, at 9:30 a. m., sharp, on July 4th. The line of march will be through the principal streets of the city, under charge of the Marshal of the Day. After the parade you may have your display in front of your place of business, as an advertisement, for the balance of the day if you so desire.

We wish all business men to have small shade trees cut and placed at the edge of the side-walk, in front of their places of business on the afternoon or evening of July 3d.

We ask the co-operation of all to make this celebration a success. Let every man place his shoulder to the wheel and help advertise our city.

Good Roads and Ditches Appreciated.

We are pleased to find in our midst once more the representative of the famous New Era Grader and Ditcher, the most complete machine for grading and ditching ever invented, which fact has been largely demonstrated by many; in fact nearly all of our townships in Polk County have purchased, and are now operating a New Era Grader, which machines, in Polk County alone, built last year seven hundred miles of good high, dry graded roads, and at the same time without any extra cost to or expense made 1,400 miles of good uniform ditches, with bermes to correspond, without which it would be impossible to keep our roads in proper shape, and out of all the graders that were sold by the New Era Grader Company and their representatives, we are pleased to say that we have not heard of a single machine that did not give entire satisfaction, which fact must certainly be a great pleasure to the New Era Company and their representatives, and we trust that each and every township will adopt this system of grading and ditching, and when they do, it will lengthen our wheat growing season and at the same time give us superior crops both in quantity and quality. Now, this may seem to some as a broad assertion, but we must all admit that what we require is longer seasons in which to sow and harvest our grain and we also know that every day gained in the spring seeding makes our harvest so much earlier, and our earlier springs can be brought by drainage alone as it warms the soil from 8 to 10 degrees [illegible] without mentioning [illegible] points in its favor [illegible] drainage a necessity.

The case of the St. P. M. & M. R. R., and the Crookston Improvement Co., intervener, vs Orlando Vannest, is now being tried before the U. S. Land Office in this city. This case involves the title to the land known as Sampson's Woodland Addition to the city of Crookston, and bids fair to be a stayer. It does seem unfortunate that such hindrances should arise when that company has done and is doing so much good to this city in building it up and getting in valuable manufactories and many other ways. We trust it will not result in serious losses to them.

Artificial Legs and Arms.

"How many legs and arms do I turn out a year?" said a leading maker of artificial limbs, repeating a reporter's query. "About one limb a day, and I am only one of over fifty manufacturers in the country! Surprised at the demand? But think a moment. The late war caused over 22,000 cripples, about equally divided between the blue and the gray. many of these exchanged their 'peg-legs' as soon as possible for the regular trade article, (Congress allows cripples on the Union side, rank and file, of the land or naval force a new limb, free of cost to them,) and these artificial limbs have to be renewed occasionally—the Union cripples being allowed a new article every five years.

"But this is not all. Let me tell you that my experience goes to show—and I have made over 7,000 limbs—that the railroad catastrophes and other kinds of accidents prevalent kept up a strong demand; such accidents cause three cripples where the war did one, or, to put it another way, that the railroads cause each year as many cripples as any year of the war caused. A 100,000 would be too small a figure to include all of the 'maimed and the halt' among us. But the streets would seem to show a different story, you say? Because, my dear fellow, the science of manufacture has greatly reduced the evidence of a person's wearing artificial limbs. The old leg, with its complicated machinery in the shape of cogged wheels, steel springs, &c., caused a rattling noise that gave notice to those in the vicinity that a 'game leg' was abroad. Now all this is changed. Could anything be simpler in construction than this shapely limb here, the knee-joint worked by a mere T-joint, and what is more important, the uncertain ankle-joint, and thumping wooden foot supplanted by a elastic, noiseless rubber foot fastened firmly to the leg? Or, look at this rubber hand fastened by a spring to the wooden arm—its fingers have annealed wire running through them, so that they can be put into different positions, and thus avoid that stiff sameness of appearance so common in artificial hands. In the palm, too, is a screw socket, into which can quickly be fitted a knife and fork for eating, a hand-brush for washing, a hook for lifting and carrying, &c., and even writing may be done, if the elbow-joint remains by a firm grasp of a pen or pencil which the thumb and first finger afford. All these improvements tend to draw attention away from cripples, and thus the apparently smaller number of such unfortunates is accounted for."

"Is not the use of the artificial leg extremely limited?" asked the reporter.

"A glance at these letters would probably surprise you on that point. Farmers, builders, express messengers, oystermen—in fact, all kinds of persons doing work that is heavy or that requires one to be much on his feet, apparently hold their own on wooden legs. Boys wearing them play ball, ride horseback, skate, etc.; girls dance with them, and, in short, there seems to be hardly any end to their practical usefulness. Did you know that there are quite a number of persons having both legs artificial, and that they go about freely? Tommy!" called the manufacturer at this point, "show us how you walk."

A young man of about 20 appeared, and with a slightly "cranky" motion walked, without a cane, rapidly up and down the room. "That boy," resumed the manufacturer, "had both his legs amputated—one above the knee and the other just below. He has walked a half-mile in nine minutes on his artificial legs."

"Will you tell me something of the material used, of prices, &c.?"

"Of course, the body of the leg is hollow. All sorts of material have been used—leather, German silver, papier-mache, and even corrugated iron! Paper to be light must be very thin, (paper as thick as wood is heavier, you know,) and this is fatal, because a stump is likely to change from time to time, and the alterations in the artificial leg thus made necessary may cause the thin paper to be whittled away in no time. Yellow willow is the material preferred, as it is both light and tough. It is molded to the shape of the leg, and then covered with thin buckskin having an enamel coating of the flesh tint. The soft finish of this is decidedly attractive. Of course, stockings or socks are worn, and the foot is properly 'booted.' The leg can be adjusted in a minute or two. The 'cork leg?' I'm afraid that is a bit of a myth, for I have been in this business over 25 years, and I have yet to see a single artificial leg made of cork. Prices are generally $100 for a leg (and it should last about eight years on the average) and from $50 to $75 for an arm. True, that is about the same rate as just after the war, but every order is separate and individual; only once in my experience have two legs been exactly alike."

"How soon after amputation should an artificial limb be applied?"

"Now you raise a point in dispute between some surgeons and the artificial limb makers. There are surgeons who hold that a year should intervene. Others confirm my own belief that the delay should be only until the stump has thoroughly healed; for, after that point, the stump begins to deposit at its extremity a large amount of adipose tissue; its disuse begets weakness in the muscles—and these muscles are required to operate the artificial leg—and the art of locomotion on artificial legs being quite different from that with crutches, is picked up with considerable difficulty after a long experience with the latter."

Glittering Generalities.

The Isle of Man is notoriously a resort for women. In 1881 the House of Keys passed a bill which conferred the same electoral privileges on men as on women. But, enlightened as it is in other respects, Man still groans under an upper Chamber, and that body refused to pass the bill in its entirety, and only allowed a £4 ownership qualification to give the vote to women.

The English House of Commons, by a vote of 149 to 79, rejected the bill to license cremation, on the ground that public sentiment is opposed to that process of disposing of the dead.

Friction matches of certain popular brands are selling here at $2.70 and $1.35 per case. A year ago the former, going at 144 boxes per case, sold at $3.25, and the latter, 100 boxes to the case, at $3.85. This little reduction of 50 to 60 per cent. in value is a consequence of the abolition of the stamp tax of about one cent, per 100 matches.

In the middle ages child marriages were the regular thing among the royalty and nobility of Europe. In 1477, Richard, Duke of York, second son of Edward IV., was married to Anne Mowbray, Duchess of Norfolk in her own right. The bridegroom was not 5 years old, and the bride scarcely 3. They were very pretty children, and the ceremony is described as most affecting and beautiful. About a year later the child bride died, and at the age of 9 the boy bridegroom was smothered in the tower by the uncle for whom he had been named.

The officers of the British bark St. Lawrence, at Philadelphia, from Damerara, report a remarkable experience during the voyage. When about five hundred miles off Cape Hatteras the air suddenly became very dense, and great difficulty was experienced in breathing. A strong odor as of burning pine timber was also preceptible. The misty mass is described as of light bluish tint, forming a zone extending from the horizon toward the zenith about fifteen degrees. Within the radius of a mile the water was inky black.

Carlyle's Discourtesy.

Carlyle's power in the better days of his career was due to the fact that he appealed to man's faith in the infinite and eternal. He taught reverence for truth, justice and nobleness. When he descended to inculcate the worship of mere sincerity and force, and to exalt the self-willed, ambitious Frederick the Great as a hero, many of his disciples ceased to admire him. Those who visited him discovered that the man had become dogmatic, overbearing and even brutal.

An English writer tells an anecdote which exhibits the coarseness of Carlyles nature. Leigh Hunt, the essayist and poet, was a chronic borrower, and Carlyle was among the friends from whom he occasionally sought pecuniary assistance.

Carlyle used to keep on his mantelpiece three sovereigns in a small package. He would call the attention of his visitors to them, remarking that they were "Leigh Hunt's sovereigns," because whenever the poet applied for a small loan these were intended for him.

"Hunt," says the writer, "would have lent him three thousand sovereigns had he possessed them, and never disclosed the circumstance."

A foreign correspondent of the Boston Journal tells an anecdote which exhibits Carlyle's conduct to people he did not like.

W. H. Mallock, an English essayist and novelist, one day called upon Carlyle. Mr. Mallock, as was Carlyle, is a great talker, and on that evening, it is said, he left his host no opportunity to engage in the conversation, except as a listener. Carlyle invited Mallock to stay to tea, and afterwards had him in the library to smoke. When the guest took his leave, Carlyle accompanied him to the door, and said,—

"Well, good-by! I've received ye kindly, because I knew your mother; but I never want to set eyes on ye again!"—Youth's Companion.

Henry Irving's Death Scenes.

From the Chicago News.

The critics do not seem to have noticed—at least, they have not commented upon—the natural way in which Henry Irving counterfeits the death struggle upon the stage. The American actors invariably fall backward when they come to the death scene in their tragedies; Mr. Irving falls forward, full upon his face, and this, we are told by physicians and soldiers, is the natural way with those suddenly overtaken by death. In a recent conversation, Captain Lee, of the regular army, said that Irving's death in "Louis XI" was the most natural bit of acting he had ever seen. He had been a witness of numerous shooting affairs upon the border, and he had noticed that, when a man was shot his head fell forward upon his breast, and his body fell in the direction indicated by the head.

Captain Lee visited the field of Gettysburg the day after the battle, and he found the dead, in ninety-nine out of 100 cases, lying flat upon their faces. American painters invariably represent the dead upon the battle-field as lying upon their backs. Perhaps they do this for the purpose of delineating death upon the countenances. The French painters as invariably represent the dead with their faces downward, preferring to more subtly convey the idea of death by an outstretched arm, a convulsively clutched hand, or some other small but hideously artistic detail of the phenomenon of death. Irving is the only actor we know of who has defied every stage tradition and custom and dies on the stage as people off the stage die. The innovation is a pleasing one and should pass into custom.

Similarity of Names.

One of the odd things in a great city is the number of people who have similar names, from which amusing and often annoying experience are apt to result. To say nothing of John Smith, when one John Brown or William Robinson gets married, dozens of other John Browns or William Robinsons receive letters of congratulation, and if one of the names applies for a divorce, all the others wonder if the applicant is the man they knew. This is the time the wives of such gentlemen receive numerous calls from their friends, all of whom think of course it could not possibly be their acquaintance, but that they will feel more comfortable if they go and see about it. It may even happen that a very prominent citizen who never took a pin from any one or could bring himself to kill a fly, takes up his morning newspaper and reads his own name as one associated with burglary or suspected of murder, and it may be assumed that the paragraph [illegible] him [illegible] when [illegible] and thinks he would [illegible] of the felony [illegible]

DOWN IN THE DEEP.

Confirmation of the Loss of the Steamer State of Florida, with over 100 Lives.

Quebec Special: The painful suspense that prevailed here all day with regard to the survivors of the disaster to the ill-fated steamer State of Florida, was relieved by the arrival of the Donaldson steamer Titiana, from Glasgow to Montreal, with coal and a general cargo, which was telegraphed the 7th as on her way to Quebec with twenty-four of the saved party.

The captain of the Titiana reports: May 5, at 9 p. m., while proceeding up the gulf and off Bird rocks, observed a ship exhibiting two bright lights, and thinking he wished to communicate, bore down upon him and took off twenty-four passengers and the crew rescued from the State of Florida of Glasgow. The steamship City of Rome passed them while on board the ship Louisa, and answered their signals, but did not stop. Following is the official report of the third officer of the State of Florida:

Left New York on the 12th of April, with about 167 passengers and crew and full general cargo. All went well until the night of the 18th. At 11:30 came in collision with the bark Ponema of Chatham, N. B., Capt. Helburn. Both ships went down almost immediately, and out of the steamer's passengers and crew only forty-four, including the stewardess, managed to escape in boats, and out of the bark's crew of fifteen only the captain and two seamen saved. The next morning the bark was observed bottom up. The survivors, after being thirty-five hours in boats without food or water, were rescued by the Norwegian bark Theresa, of Christiana, from that port, bound for Quebec. On the 22d, twenty-four of them were transferred on the ship Louisa, of and from Cardiff for Quebec, where they remained till May 5, when they were taken on board the Titiana for Quebec. It is believed that 135 lives were lost.

Members of the rescued party on board the Titiana presented a pitiable appearance, so sudden was the calamity, that many of them in their bunks at the time, had to hurry on deck and into the boats in their nightclothes. Most of them had but a very confused idea of what really took place. All could distinctly remember, however, the crash and rush for the deck. The survivors also remember with a shudder the dash for the boats as the ship went down amid the shrieks and lamentations of the passengers. Those on duty at the time remember seeing a red light flash for an instant, followed by a crash, after which nothing but confusion followed, the steamer beginning to sink and hurried preparation being made to launch the boats. The bark went down instantly. The frightened passengers rushed on deck in their nightclothes, and the scene was indescribable. Women went into hysterics and men refused to move. The women especially objected to being doomed vessel. Some who could have been saved absolutely refused to budge an inch. Those who clung to the bottom of the capsized boat all night suffered terribly from icy cold water, though the sea was calm. Nevertheless they did not lose heart. Out of 167 souls only 44 were saved, if the other 20 were not also picked up. The bark also went down with 13 souls.

TARIFF BILL KILLED.

The Enacting Clause Stricken Out in the House by a Majority of Four.

In the house, on Tuesday, after strong speeches from Mr. Randall, Mr. Blackburn, Mr. Kasson and others, Mr. Converse, pushing to the front, moved to strike out the enacting clause. This was a signal for a volly of hisses and groans from the Democratic side, this demonstration being met by rounds of applause from the Republican side. The scene in the chamber was one of intense excitement and confusion to which the galleries rendered no little aid by loud tokens of approval. Tellers being ordered, Messrs. Converse and Morrison were appointed by the chair. Before taking his place, Morrison called to the clerk of the house, who was standing by the speaker's desk, and exclaimed: "Clark, see that no d—d scoundrel who is paired goes between the tellers". Clark promising to see that fair ground should be had, Morrison took his station, giving Converse a very cool shake of the hand as he stood opposite that gentleman. Then the voting began, and the tellers announced the affirmative vote to be 155. The first man to pass through in the negative was Reagan of Texas, who had been brought in an invalid chair in order to cast his vote. He was heartily applauded by his friends and received many congratulations upon his apparent recovery from his late severe illness. The negative vote was announced as 151, and then George D. Wise (Va.) voted in the affirmative, making the vote stand 159 to 155.

The only Republicans who voted with the Democrats against striking out the enacting clause of the bill, were Messrs. Strait, Nelson, Wakefield and White of Minnesota. On being asked to explain their votes these gentlemen all say that they voted to take up the bill up to consider it, and having done so, they could not consistently vote to eject it after three weeks' time wasted in discussion. In addition, they say they favor a revision of the tariff and would have voted for the Morrison bill if properly amended.

The Democrats who voted with the Republicans in favor of striking out the enacting clause were: Messrs. Budd, Glascock, Charles A. Sumner, and Tully, of California; Eaton of Connecticut; Finerty of Illinois; Converse, Foran, Geddes, Jordan, LeFevre, Murry, David R. Paige, Seney, A. J. Warner and Wilkins, of Ohio; Boyle, Connolly, Curtis, Duncan, Elliott, Ermentrout, Hopkins, Mutchler, Patten, Post, Randall and Storm of Pennsylvania; Arnot, Hutchins, Muller, Spriggs, Van Alstyne and Wemple of New York; Findlay of Maryland; George D. Wise of Virginia; Farrell, Fiedler and McAdoo of New Jersey; Snyder of West Virginia, and Hunt of Louisiana—39.

It is supposed that this will end tariff legislation for this session and ensure an early adjournment.

Death of Judah P. Benjamin.

Judah P. Benjamin, the distinguished lawyer and advocate and ex-member of the government of the Southern confederacy, is dead. He died in his apartments, Avenue Jena, Paris. He had been in failing health ever since he fell while descending from a tramway car several years ago. The death of Mr. Benjamin in exile removes one of the ablest lawyers and brightest men that America ever produced. At this late day when the passions and prejudices engendered by the civil war are fast dying out, the people of the United States will not fail to acknowledge his true worth and greatness. To the legal profession both of this country and England the news of his death will be read with profound regret.

Judah Peter Benjamin was born in Hayti in 1812. He practiced law in New Orleans, was elected United States senator from Louisiana in 1852 and re-elected in 1859. He acted with the democrats and became a secessionist. He was secretary of state of the confederate states from February, 1862, till the collapse of the government in 1865. He then went to London, where he practiced law until February, 1883, when he retired having made a fortune. Mr. Benjamin was of the Jewish race, and possessed to a marked degree the tireless energy of that people. He showed himself to be a man of great resources, and was one of the most vigorous characters connected with the defunct confederacy.

For the Aid of Gen. Grant.

Washington Special: Senator Edmunds left the chair of the vice president Wednesday to offer a bill to place Gen. Grant on the retired list of the army, and in a brief speech alluded indirectly to his financial failure, which was announced in the papers. He said he hoped the committee on military affairs would hasten the passage of the bill. Such a measure has been repeatedly introduced in congress, but has invariably failed. Southern democrats, especially ex-confederates, are kindly disposed toward Grant and little opposition is anticipated beyond that of democrats of the Holman type in the house and Voorhees type in the senate. While it is well known that Grant has a comfortable fortune left there is a generous feeling that his services deserve the providing of him against the ups and downs of commercial business.

Irish Colonization.

A meeting of the stockholders of the Irish Catholic Colonization society was held in Chicago, Wednesday. Among others present were Bishop Ireland, of Minnesota, [illegible] agent in Nebraska, and [illegible] agent in Minnesota. Bishop [illegible] reported [illegible]

The Grand Lodge A. O. U. W.

The grand lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen convened at Workmen hall, St. Paul, on Tuesday, the 6th. There were 150 present, representing 87 different lodges. The jurisdiction of the grand lodge comprises Minnesota, Dakota and Manitoba. Of the representatives, eight were from Dakota, one from Manitoba and the balance from Minnesota. The business of the day was the consideration of reports presented by the grand medical director, grand master workman, grand recorder, grand receiver and representative from the supreme lodge. There were at the last meeting of this lodge 3,030 members, out of which number twenty have died. There has been $40,000 insurance paid during the year. The expense of collecting and disbursing this money $4,000, and the expense for the year to each member, $15.

An appropriation was made for a deputy to visit lodges in the jurisdiction for the purpose of increasing the membership. No special effort will be made the ensuing year to increase the number of lodges, it being considered advisable to concentrate all efforts to increase the membership in the established ones. It was decided that under the constitution members over fifty years old cannot be received into this from another jurisdictions. Grand lodges of other jurisdictions have decided this point adversely. The grand representatives to the supreme lodge were instructed to urge a graded assessment according to age. An effort was made to make a graded initiatory fee, ranging from $3 to $25, according to age, but this failed. The capitation tax for the expenses of the grand lodge was fixed for the ensuing year at $1 for each member. The expenses of this session was $911.

Following is the list of grand officers elected for the ensuing year:

Grand Master Workman, D. E. Vance of Winona; grand foreman, E. H. Stevens, St. Paul; grand overseer, A. J. Blesser of Milbank, Dak.; grand recorder, William Chenney, Minneapolis; grand receiver, J. J. McCardy of St. Paul; grand guide, H. J. Birch of Wadena; grand watchman, J. J. Giddings of Anoka; grand trustee, J. Tonn of Minneapolis; past master workman, O. H. Roberts of Rochester; representatives to supreme lodge, O. H. Roberts of Rochester, A. L. Levi of Minneapolis, J. M. Nye of Wells; medical director, Talbot Jones of St. Paul; finance committee, D. Ramaly, Monroe Sheire, G. W. Thayer, Lake City; judiciary committee L. Van Slyke of Hastings, A. H. Talsey of Donnely, F. F. Wilde of St. Paul.

The lodge adjourned to meet again at the same place on the first Tuesday in May, 1885, at 10 o'clock a. m.

Magnitude of the Grant Failures.

New York Tribune: Frederick D. Grant, while not a member of the suspended firm, had his office with them, and has been interested in their operations. Jesse R. Grant, another son of the general, is not a partner in Grant & Ward, but it is supposed he has had business relations with them, and that his finances have been involved in the same way as those of Frederick have been.

An enormous amount of unsecured liabilities of Grant & Ward exists, comprising notes and simple receipts for money received for speculation. Neither of the Grants is supposed to have paid closer attention to details than the regular drawing of his allowance of $3,000 per month. It is stated on good authority that there are outstanding nearly $2,000,000 unsecured obligations of the firm held between two individuals. It is said that the liabilities of this character will amount in all to about $5,000,000. Not only are they (Grant & Ward) known to have rehypothecated securities lodged with them on loans by several railroad companies, but they have obtained larger advances on some of their collaterals than the amounts they had advanced.

The assignment of Frederick D. Grant to James McNamee shows the following preferences:

Henry F. Shoemaker, New York, $125,000; Ulysses S. Grant, Elizabeth, $5,000; Thomas Brendway, late of Galena, Ill., $1,566; Cornelius H. Garrison, New York, $50,000; Mary J. Grover, Jersey City, $7,300; Mrs. Benjamin L. Honore, Chicago, $10,000; Virginia O. Corbin, Jersey City, $25,000; Mrs. Fred T. Grant, Queenstown, N. J., $6,000.

The assignment of Jesse R. Grant to James McNamee gives preferences as follows:

Henry F. Shoemaker, New York, $50,000; Mrs. N. A. Hopper, Hackensack, N. J., $15,000; John E. Mason, San Francisco, $15,000; Thomas H. Bailey, New York $15,000.

An assignment of Grant & Ward, Ulysses S. Grant, Fernandi Ward, Ulysses S. Grant, Jr., and James D. Fish, copartners under the firm name of Grant & Ward, to Julian F. Davies, was also filed. The names of preferred creditors are as follows:

Edward C. James, James Henry Work, William S. Warner, Jerome B. Chaffee, Frank F. Wood, Edward L. Short, E. M. Wilmerding, Charles P. Britton, Ezra A. Tuttle, James G. Gardner and Frederick D. Grant.

"The Old Minnesota First."

H. L. Gordon, president of the First Regiment Minnesota Volunteer association has issued the following call, which will interest all the surviving members of the famous organization.

The next annual reunion of comrades of the old First Minnesota will be held at Minneapolis on Tuesday, July 22, 1884. The grand encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic will begin at Minneapolis on that day, and the G. A. R. will parade on that day. The old First, as an organized body, will join in the parade. All old comrades are urgently requested to be present and to appear, if practicable, in dark suits and hats. Notice of the place of rendezvous will be announced hereafter. All comrades who read this notice will please send to me immediately their names and postoffice address, and also the names and address of other comrades known to them. We desire to have every soldier of the old First Minnesota attend the reunion. In order to reach, if possible, every surviving veteran of the First, I request the editors of all newspapers in Minnesota, Dakota, Montana, Northern Wisconsin and Northern Iowa to publish this notice without charge.

Private Life of Emperor William.

The private life of the Emperor William flows along very simply. When in Berlin he occupies a comparatively small palace on the corner of Unter den Linden and the Opera-place, his presence being made known to the Berliners by the red flag with the Landwehr cross, which is then hoisted over the roof. The window of his study on the ground floor looks out upon that point in Unter den Linden where Rauch's statue of Frederick the Great stands. Ordinarily the Emperor rises between 6 and 7 o'clock in the morning. He dresses at once completely for the day; the convenience of dressing-gown and slippers is unknown to him. The room to which, after a slight breakfast, he goes for work is rather plainly furnished. There is a mahogany writing-table covered with writing materials of every kind, packages of letters, small presents from members of his family, and mementoes of battles in the form of paper-weights. Smoking implements fail, for the Emperor is no friend of tobacco. On a long and broad table near by lie books, maps, bundles of documents, and papers of various kinds. The Emperor sits at his work on an ordinary chair covered with leather, and receives personally all communications, opens them himself, writes his decision on the margin, and hands them to his secretary to be disposed of. One of his peculiarities is his economy in the use of paper and envelopes. In Versailles one evening he announced a new victory of the Germans to the Chancellor on a piece of paper which had been torn from a letter. In Berlin the envelopes which reach him with reports from the Foreign Office addressed, "To his Majesty the Emperor," go back with the "to" erased and "from" substituted, so that the envelope reads, "From his Majesty the Emperor," with "To the Chancellor" written beneath. The Emperor's extraordinary capacity for work makes it possible for him to dispose as a rule personally of the affairs connected with his office, or at least to direct their disposition in his own way.—Dr. Moritz Busch, in Harper's Magazine.

A Sensational Murder Case in England.

London Special cable: A terrible tragedy in high life is reported from Devonshire. Mr. Hugh Shortland, a rich barrister from Australia, had been spending the past few months in that county enjoying a vacation. He made the acquaintance of a Miss Dimes, the daughter of a wealthy country gentleman and connected with some of the most aristocratic families, and proposed marriage to her. Mr. Dimes, however, objected to Shortland's attentions, having heard some disreputable stories about his habits, which Mr. Dimes was convinced were too much those of a dissipate and profligate. Shortland, being eleven address and skilled in intrigue, managed to induce Mr. Dimes to postpone a final decision until he could be convinced that his impressions were erroneous and thus maintained his entree at the residence. Taking advantage of the opportunities afforded by his probation, the Australian pressed his suit with the young lady, and finally induced her to elope with him, and they were duly married. Soon after eloping, the young lady's dead body was found in a pond on her father's estate. At about the time the body was discovered, Shortland, it was reported, left Devonshire. It was generally supposed, therefore, that Mrs. Shortland had committed suicide in a fit of despondency. This view was confirmed by a letter which was received from Shortland soon after the finding of the body. An investigation was begun and it was soon ascertained that Shortland had never left England at all since his marriage, and that he had written his letter and sent it under cover to a friend at Brindisi. Shortland was promptly arrested, and his trial promises to be one of the most sensational in English criminal records. All efforts to find a reason for the murder have failed, and Shortland refuses to make any utterances on the subject.

A Baptist Minister's Experience.

I am a Baptist Minister and before I even thought of being a clergyman I graduated in medicine but left a lucrative practice for my present profession, 40 years ago, I was for many years a sufferer from Quinsy, "Thomas Eclectric Oil cured me," I was also troubled with Hoarseness and Thomas Eclectric Oil always relieved me. My wife and child had Diphtheria, and "Thomas Eclectric Oil cured them" and if taken in time it will cure seven times out of ten, I am confident it is a cure for the most obstinate Cold, or Cough and if any one will take a small teaspoon and half fill it with the Oil and then place the end of the spoon in one nostril and draw the Oil out of the spoon into the head by sniffing as hard as they can until the Oil falls over into the throat and practice that twice a week, I don't care how offensive their head may be, it will clean it out and cure their Catarrh. For deafness and Earache it has done wonders to my certain knowledge. It is the only medicine dubbed patent medicine that I have ever felt like recommending and I am very anxious to see it in every place, for I tell you that I would not be without it in my house for any consideration, I am now suffering with a pain like Rheumatism in my right limb and nothing relieves me like Thomas Eclectric Oil.

SKIN HUMOR

My baby six months old broke out with some kind of skin humor, and after being treated five months by my family physician, was given up to die. The druggist recommended Swift's Specific, and the effect was as gratifying as it was miraculous. My child soon got well, all traces of the disease is gone, and he is as fat as a pig. J. J. Kirkland, Minden, Rusk County, Texas.

I have suffered for many years from ulcers on my legs. Often very large and painful, during which time I used almost everything to effect a cure, but in vain. I took Swift's Specific by advice of a friend, and in a short time was cured sound and well. Edwin J. Miller, Beaumont, Texas.

I have been afflicted with Scrofula for twelve years and have had sores on me as large as a man's hand for that length of time. Last summer I was so bad off that I could not wear clothing. I had spent hundreds of dollars in the effort to be cured, but all to no purpose, and had injured myself with Mercury and Potash. Your Swift's Specific cured me promptly and permanently, and I hope every like sufferer will take it. R. L. High, Lakonl, Ark.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

For the Eyes of the Cook.

Spanish Eggs.—Cook one cupful of rice thirty minutes in two quarts of boiling water, to which has been added one teaspoonful of salt. Drain through a colander and add one tablespoonful of butter. Spread very lightly on a hot platter. On the rice place six dropped eggs and serve.

Oat Meal for Babies.—Put four tablespoonfuls of oat meal in a tin pail and pour on it three pints of cold water. Put the pail in a vessel with hot water in it and boil steadily for two hours. Then pour it into an oat-meal strainer—a common sieve will do—and drain all the liquid off thoroughly. To one cup of this add one half cup of cream, two cups water, and sugar enough to make it palatable. Give through the nursing bottle. Instead of the cream, if desirable, a half cup of the oat-meal water may be used. When rolled oats are used an hour's cooking is enough.

Spider Corn Cake.—One and two-thirds cupfuls of meal, one-third of a cupful of flour, two eggs, two cupfuls of sweet milk, one-fourth of a cupful of sugar, a small teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of salt, a piece of butter half the size of an egg. Dissolve the soda in one cupful of the sweet milk; beat the eggs light; add the milk in which the soda is dissolved, and also the sour milk to the dry ingredients and then add the egg. Have a large frying pan very hot; put the butter in it, greasing the sides well, and pour in the mixture. Now pour in the other cupful of sweet milk, but do not stir the cake. Place the frying-pan in a hot oven and bake from twenty to twenty-five minutes.

Marble Cake.—Light Part: White sugar one-and-one-half cup, one-half cup of butter, sweet milk one-half cup, soda one-half teaspoonful, cream of tartar one teaspoonful, whites of four eggs, flour, two-and-half cups. Dark Part: Brown sugar one cup, molasses one-half cup, butter one-half cup, sour milk one-half cup, flour two-and-a-half cups, yelks of four eggs, ground cloves, allspice, cinnamon, nutmeg, of each one tablespoonful. Beat the eggs with the sugar, soften the butter, and then stir it in; put the soda and cream-of-tartar into the cream or milk, stirring up and mixing all together; sift and stir in the flour. When each part is ready, drop a spoonful of light, then a spoonful of dark, and so on until the pan is full, dropping the light on the dark as you continue till all is used.

Surprise Cake.—One egg, sugar one cup, butter one-half cup, sweet milk one cup, soda one teaspoonful, cream of tartar, two teaspoonfuls. Flavor with lemon, and use sufficient flour to make it of the proper consistency, and you will be really surprised to see its bulk and beauty.

German Pie.—Take the yellow grated rind, juice, and the inside pulp of two lemons, rejecting the white, hard rind and seeds. To this add two cups of sugar, two well beaten eggs, one-half cup of molasses (sorghum), one-half cup of water, one tablespoonful of flour and one of butter. Bake with two crusts. This is excellent.

Cookies Everlasting.—One cup of cream, two cups of sugar, one-half cup of butter, two teaspoonfuls of cream-of-tartar, one teaspoonful of soda, two eggs. These cookies will keep a year.

Soft Molasses Ginger Bread.—Good molasses one pint, butter one-fourth of a pound, soda one tablespoonful, ginger one large tablespoonful, or to suit the taste. Melt the butter, and pour into the molasses; mix in the soda until it froths; then stir in the ginger and flower to make it stiff enough to handle well with a spoon. Bake 40 or 45 minutes.

Cream Pie.—Two cups of sugar, a piece of butter the size of an egg, four eggs, two teaspoonfuls of cream-of-tartar, one of soda, three cups of flour. Bake in a single cake, and split, or bake in jelly pans. For the cream, take [illegible] cup, two eggs, two-thirds of a cup of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, the juice of two lemons. Mix thoroughly, and set in a pan containing boiling water, and stir until it thickens. When cold, spread between the layers of cakes. Any other flavor can be used instead of lemon. This is an excellent recipe.

Hoeing the Short Rows.

Neglect is the prime reason why so many people have what they call "poor luck" with fowls.

The fear of lice is the beginning of wisdom in the hen business. The breeder who masters that difficulty will find other things comparatively easy.

Attention to little things about the farm as to any other business, is what increases the profits. Plenty of eggs a few chickens, a few calves, a colt or so help wonderfully. If some of the perquisities arising are given to the children for the care bestowed they will cheerfully help in the garden, and thus another important item is added to the well being of the family.

Sir J. Bennet Lawes, of England, has been trying an experiment in letting grain and weeds grow together not only until harvest, but year after year on the same land, and he finds that one or two crops are all that the land will produce without plowing and seeding.

Farmers who have families of children can hardly be too careful about the character of the help employed both in the house and out of doors. Most of the farm laborers have habits of thought and act that make them very injurious to the young people with whom they associate.

A disease resembling pleuro-pneumonia has broken out among cattle in Washington county, Pa. Veterinary surgeons pronounce it contagious and have recommended the governor to quarentine the districts. The disease first developed itself about two months ago on the farm of Robert C. Vance. It was proved beyond doubt to be pleuro-pneumonia.

There is a general opinion among old farmers that cows having only three teats are apt to be superior milkers. This is often the fact, and one reason doubtless is that cows which give large quantities of rich milk are most liable to those injuries from inflammation which destroy one of the teats.

Clover hay is much better for milch cows than timothy. It produces a larger quantity of milk, and also of a better quality. All butter makers know how yellow the butter is which is made from the milk of cows fed on clover.

According to government statistics the area under wheat in British India is 20,000,000 acres and the yield about 180,000,000 bushels or about nine bushels to the acre; some of the sections more favorable to the crop or better cultivated yield as high as 18 bushels, comparing well with the average yield in this country. The cost of production varies greatly in different provinces. It is calculated for northern India at 35 cents per bushel.

There are several works on cattle diseases; Dadd's "Cattle Doctor" is an old work—and is plain, simple and useful. Dadd's Horse Book is also a useful work for those who do not understand technical terms. The best book of the kind is Law's Farmer's Veterinary Adviser, but it is of little use to inexperienced persons, because there is no way indicated to recognize the diseases, so as to apply the course of treatment mentioned which, however, is excellent. Dadd's books on this account are better for popular use.

Poultry manure is of great value. When fresh it contains in 1,000 pounds 16 pounds of nitrogen, with 4 to 8 pounds of potash, worth 48 cents; and 15 pounds of phosphoric acid, worth $1.50, with lime magnesia, &c., worth 10 cents or more; total about $6 or $12 a ton. At the same valuation good barn-yard manure is worth $3.50 per ton. It is still more valuable than common manure, because of its fine condition and easy solubility, and on this account a little goes a long way. It is a good dressing for grass land, and may be sown over it at the rate of 500 pounds to the acre. For corn a handful may be scattered in the hill and covered with soil when the seed is dropped. If it is dry it would be well to mix it with as much moist earth, as in a dry condition it is too strong to use alone unless spread very thinly.

Currant Bushes from Cuttings.

From the Massachusetts Ploughman.

Currant plants grow so readily from cuttings [illegible] the currant, providing the work be properly done. To attempt as many do, to make cuttings root by cutting them from the bushes in the Spring after the buds have started will very often result in a failure, but if the cuttings be cut in the Autumn and burried in a sand bank until Spring, success will be much more certain. Before the cuttings are placed in the sand they should be cut in such lengths as are desired for planting out. From six to ten inches may be considered proper lengths. When cuttings are left until Spring to be cut up, the top cuttings will not do so well, because while in the sand, numerous roots are thrown out at the lower end of each cutting, thus giving it the advantage of a newly-cut cutting, but if cut in proper lengths in the Autumn all will have roots when taken from the sand. The cuttings should be set in good rich land that has no tendency to dry up during the hot weather; if a portion of shade can be afforded so much the better, but if not they will do very well in the sun.

In setting the cuttings they should never be set perpendicularly, but on an angle of forty-five degrees, and set low enough so that only one or two buds shall be above the surface. In cultivation the greatest care should be taken not to start the cuttings, for unless they are well rooted it requires but very little to move one enough to kill it, or at least to prevent rapid growth. Cuttings properly set and well cared for will rarely fail to grow, and if the soil be rich and thoroughly prepared, will make a growth the first year of from six to eighteen inches. To get good strong roots they should be permitted to grow two years before transplanting, when they will be from two to three feet high, if they have been well manured and well cultivated.

Careful watch must be kept during the months of May, June and July for the currant worm, and as soon as he makes his appearance hellebore should be freely dusted over the bushes; a neglect to do this for a single week will be fatal to the life of the cutting, at least during the first year. In fact, whatever be the age of a currant bush the worms must keep off to secure success.

How Far Apart to Plant Potatoes.

It depends upon the variety and its habit of growth. As a general rule the early kinds require less room then the later ones; for not having vines so rank and spreading they need to be planted closer, that they may about cover and shade the ground at the time of full growth, which the later varieties, with their heavier growth of top, will do equally well if planted several inches apart; besides, these later and heavier-yielding sorts require a broader hill for the tubers to spread in, which is only possible to have by the width of the rows apart. To test this question I took three or four varieties, ranging from the earliest to latest that I planted that year for the field crop, and planted all of them at about so many different breadths apart from 2½ to 3½ foot rows, and by carefully noting the results, found that the Peerless, and other late varieties, yielded best, besides being of better uniform good size when grown in 3 feet and 3½ feet rows; but the same varieties planted only 2½ feet apart gave small samples and less weight of yield, reckoning by the acre.

On the other hand, the Early Rose and similar early kinds yielded just as well by the row, in the 2½ feet rows, as in the 3½ feet rows, or about as 6 to 4, or nearly once and a half better yield by the closer planting. As a practical result of this experiment I have since adopted the gauges in planting, which are: 2½ feet rows for the early varieties, and 3 feet 3 3-5 inches for all the late kinds. At these two gauges I have just six rows to the rod of one, and five rows to the rod of the other, or 36 hills to a square rod of the Rose, and 22 hills of the Peerless, making it easy to reckon at any time how the seed is holding out in planting; how much is being cultivated, or hoed in a day, and what the yield is of any variety, and in any part of the planter's business, which are generally left to be guessed at, unless the farmer has this handy way of making an exact calculation.—Henry Ives, Genesee Co., N. Y.

They Dissolved.

From the Detroit Free Press.

Twenty years ago two Detroit attorneys, both of whom are still living today and pleading for criminals entangled in the meshes of law, were returning from Pontiac by the highway. About 9 o'clock in the evening they were stopped by a highwayman some three miles from the city, and at the command of "Your money or your life" both shelled out. This is, one of the pair handed out two or three dollars in wildcat money, while the other was robbed of about $100 in gold and a valuable watch. Both were highly indignant, and the one who lost most at once set the sheriff after the robber and soon had him in jail. He had made the complaint individually, and a few days before the trial was to come off he remarked to his partner:

"I suppose I shall have to summon you as a witness. You can, of course, identify the fellow?"

"N—o, I think not," was the reply.

"What! It wasn't a week ago that you said you could pick him out of 10,000!"

"Yes but he has since employed me as his council, you see?"

"Would you take his case against me, when you, too, were robbed?" asked the complainant, as his face grew whiter than moonlight.

"Why not? You've lost your money anyhow, while he will give me $75 to clear him. If you have any witnesses you'd better hunt 'em up, as we are prepared to prove an alibi!"

When the trial was called the defendant had no trouble in proving by his own lawyer that it was a case of mistaken identity, and those attorneys have never spoken to each other since.

Statistics of suicide compiled by the Insurance Chronicle show that 1,409 self-murders occurred in the United States during 1883. The compiler carefully classifies the returns under four heads, as "Number of Suicides" in the "Spring," "Summer," "Autumn" and "Winter," and confirms by his figures the accepted impression that people are most in danger from themselves in hot weather. The suicides of the Spring season of 1883 numbered 311, those of Summer 475, of Autumn 347, and of Winter 276. The propensity of men to suicide is decidedly marked as compared with women, the former numbering 1,083 of the 1,409.

Married by Their Wives.

From San Francisco Argonaut.

I firmly believe that a large number of men are married by their wives. Outside her natural charms a woman has a certain mesmeric will-force to bring to bear on a man which is dangerous to his welfare. There are critical moments in a man's career when it will take all the resolution he can master to refrain from compromising himself for life.

I was much amused with the experience of a friend of mine who a short time ago received his first lesson in what may be called bachelor prudence. It seems that the affair commenced in good nature, took on a little crescendo, as the musicians would say, and finally ended with an allegro marziale.

My friend is one of those good-natured men who look at everything from a sentimental point of view. Overlooking the excellence of his motives, he is the most uncomfortable being to get along with possible. In his head are all the virtues of the Paladin, chivalry of a Sidney, and the Reoric self-abnegation of a Socrates; and with every new book he reads he adds a new ideal of conduct. It is not surprising that he sometimes promises more than he can carry through.

He got into trouble in the most natural way in the world, and indeed the thing has happened to others than he. A young man had been grossly impertinent to a girl friend, but in order to save that girl friend a scandal the matter had been overlooked. The cub who did the deed, however, is rich and marriageable, and consequently still has a footing in society. A girl, a stranger to my friend be it said, snubs the cub. Intense enthusiasm of my friend. Noble and discerning girl, etc., etc.; will be introduced at once. (What a dangerous thing it is to be introduced at once! Mem.—Always make it later if you can.) My friend is introduced in due form. Intense empressement on the part of my friend; gracious reception on the part of the girl. One dance, and then another. A german favor, which is returned; an invitation to call, which is accepted with alacrity. The call is made and proves agreeable. Further invitation to call; and then a promise to read from these authors who combine beauty of thought with weight of meaning. Vows of platonic friendship. (What a dangerous thing vows of platonic friendship are! Mem.—Never make them.)

The drama moved on. One evening my friend called with a particularly well-chosen assortment from Ruskin, Emerson, and DeQuincey, as pieces de resistance, and a little of Barry Cornwall and Mrs. Browning's "Portuguese Sonnets as plats cucres. The fire was burning brightly on the dogs. A few flowers were arranged in a slender silver vase, and an almost imperceptible perfume pervaded the room. As my friend threw himself back in the long easy-chair and experienced the exquisite masculine thrill of pleasure in ruining the lace tidy, he fell to thinking what an agreeable duty was his to fill a fresh, pure mind, with angel eyes and sylph-like form, with fair thoughts taken from the masters of prose and song. This train of thought was peculiarly agreeable to him from the fact that it was quite disinterested. "Some day," thought my friend, "some good fellow will be made happy by the influence of this teaching." These delightful imaginations were brought to a close by the appearance of the fair pupil herself. After chatting pleasantly for a little while, my friend asked whether he should begin reading.

"I should like it very much," she said, quietly.

So he began. First with Emerson's "Napoleon"; then with DeQuincey's "Joan of Arc;" then followed a sonnet or two, and then a love song by Barry Cornwall. And as my friend's voice rose and fell and became strong with noble scorn, awful with elevation, quiet with reserved strength, and melting with the accent of pathos and love, he could not help thinking. "How much I am doing, to be sure, for the other fellow. The reading was concluded with the rapt air of one of whose thoughts were too full for utterance. He closed the beautifully bound volume of Ruskin's "Queen's Gardens," and looked vaguely up from the glowing logs to the mantel-piece above.

"How beautiful it is," finally said the pupil.

"Yes, it is very beautiful," replied the master.

The latter now rose to take his leave, when the fair pupil herself rose, and, it seemed to him, fairly planted herself before the door. Without the slightest note of warning, she thus addressed him:

"I wish," said she, with a sentimentally desperate air, "you—would—not call any more."

My friend felt a cold chill of horror stealing over his members. His knees trembled. The eyes of the young lady were firmly fixed upon him. He was expected to do something; he knew he was. What was it?

"Certainly," he managed finally to stammer out.

"You know it is different with a girl than with a man," she continued, sadly; "you have been coming here so often that people are beginning to talk."

He now knew too well what was expected of him, and for a moment he felt an overmastering impulse to comply. He overcame it manfully, and as he recovered his selfcontrole, and managed in some measure to meet those searching eyes, he became, after the manner of man, brutal.

"He would cooperate with her," he said, coldly, "in giving the lie to public opinion."

How, I do not know, he got out of the house. As he gained the garden-gate, he ran from the haunted spot—ran and ran away from danger and inconsequence. And then, in the cold moonlight, he sat down on a curbstone. The cold moon was sailing in the sky, and as he sat down on the curbstone and looked up at the heaven's blue, he murmured, in devout thankfulness, the one word: "Saved! saved!" The wind that was stirring the elms of the street seemed to whisper the same happy thought, and this is the end of my extremely ungallant but very instructive story.

Thomas F. Durant of New York has been committed to prison as an habitual drunkard. He will be removed to the Fort Hamilton inebriate asylum. He was committed on complaint of his brothers. The prisoner started a riding academy in East Fifty-eight street, which was a great success. He made about $60,000, but took to drink. He was at one time also the editor and proprietor of a newspaper.

Working a Mine All Alone.

A Nevada special to the New York Sun says: Martin Piantoni is of the stuff of which bonanza kings are made. He came here a few years ago without money or friends, and, taking up the Dead Broke mine, went to work alone. He has employed no help of any kind, and during all the time he has been delving in the earth the world has had little knowledge of his labors. He was known as a determined and industrious miner, but nobody suspected that he was running a mine of tolerable richness all by himself.

The facts have just leaked out. During the last two years he has, unaided, opened up in tunnels, drafts, winzes, shafts, and general openings 4,000 feet, and he has already broken up and ready for shipment 2,000 tons of ore, the greater part of it being of high grade. The revelation just made concerning the lone miner has made a great commotion throughout this section. He has been digging and saying nothing, while hundreds of others have been bragging and doing nothing. The success which seems to have crowned his efforts will result in more than one man following his example. Old miners say the amount of work done by Piantoni is unprecedented.

Locks of Hair from All the Presidents.

The Philadelphia Record says: Very few of the people who stream through the National museum know, I fancy, that small locks of hair taken from the heads of the presidents, from Washington to Pierce, are carefully preserved in a glass-covered box in one of the exhibition cases. They are interesting as the only relics of the bodies of our chief magistrates. Washington's hair in this collection is nearly pure white, fine, and glossy. That of John Adams is white, but coarser. Jefferson's hair is rather coarse, and in color a mixture of white and sandy brown. You can see that in his youth it must have been remarkable for its bright color. Madison's hair is coarse, a mixture of white and brown. Monroe's is fine, smooth, and of its original dark auburn in color. The hair of John Quincy Adams is of the oddest color: it is coarse, and colored like a yellow gray cat's eye. Gen. Jackson's hair is a coarse white. Van Buren's is white, fine, and smooth. Gen. Harrison's is fine and white, with a slight admixture of black. John Tyler's hair is mixed white and brown. Polk's is almost a pure white. Taylor's is white, streaked with brown. Millard Fillmore's, on the other hand, is brown, with a few white streaks. Franklin Pierce's is a dark brown, fine and soft.

Girls and Athletics.

There has certainly been a change, writes T. W. Higginson in the Woman's Journal. I can testify that there is now, among Harvard undergraduates for instance, a positive respect for a young lady who has enough of "ability to bear excessive fatigue"—the fatigue implied, it may be, in tiring them out at lawn tennis. The mere ability to play this game as some of our girls now play it, or to undertake such walking and boating expeditions as some of them achieve—these things indicate that the day has passed by when Dr. Gregory and Dr. Fordyce were final authorities. Still, it is unsatisfactory to think that while American women have led their English cousins in so many school and collegiate matters—for it was Vassar and Cornell which prepared the way for Girton and Newnham—our countrywomen have followed Englishwomen, instead of leading them, as to athletic habits. Croquet and lawn tennis had each prevailed in England several years before their American naturalization, and it bids fair to be the same with the tricycle. Fortunately the enjoyment of an outdoor exercise bears no reference to its novelty, and American women enjoy their physical emancipation none the less for taking it at second-hand. But why not originate?

The Cyclone Area.

The Chicago Tribune says that a map man of that city has gone into the cyclone business, and the result is a map showing the locality, direction, and extent of the cyclones, or tornadoes, of 1883. Dakota had one but it was a long one, moving southeasterly and bending to the northward. Southern Minnesota had two of a crescent shape, the general direction being eastward. Nebraska managed to get along without any. Kansas had five and a half, generously sharing one good one with Missouri, although the latter state had four of its own and a big one borrowed from Iowa expressly for the occasion. Iowa started four, but concluded it could get along with less, and sent one south into Missouri, and the other east into Southern Wisconsin and Northern Illinois. Wisconsin had four of her own make and two imported ones, one of the latter manufactured at Rockford, Ill., jumping from Racine across Lake Michigan to Grand Haven. Central Southern Michigan was contented with one. Indiana had only one, but it made a belt from Terre Haute east clean across the state. As usual, Illinois is in the lead. She started and took care of no less than fourteen, received the force of a big one from Iowa, and invented one of the biggest of all—that which wiped out a portion of Racine and ricochetted over the lake to the farther shore.

A Daniel! Yea, a Daniel!

"A Daniel! yea, a Daniel!" And Mr Wolff assured the spiritualists of Washington last Sunday that it was indeed Daniel, "which his last name was Webster," who had been writing through a medium at his house. The writing was in this wise: "In the midst of the solemn splendor, where that which is basest steals away into the shadows, and fain would hide itself from the light of the surpassing power of the spirit—where gradually the shadows, the infirmities of time and the deformities of sense give place to the perfection of spirits and mind—in the midst of this I testify that which has come to me has come through death. I am transfigured; the being that was seen and known on earth is me; and I am more than this; I am all that I hoped to be; I am all that I aspired to be. I was imperfect, as human beings usually are here below—as they sometimes are—struggling for higher possibilities. But I am more than I dared to dream; I am better than I dared to hope." There can be no doubt of the identity of that spirit. The literary style is unmistakably Websterian, especially that "me," and the cautious allusion to the fact that human beings are "usually," or at least "sometimes," "imperfect." A Daniel come to judgment!

PICTURES FROM LIFE.

The Pretty Girl and the Masher.

A very pretty girl, attired in a long seal dolman and carrying an alligator skin bag with initials in silver on the outside, stood at Vesey street, and Broadway, New York, waiting for a Sixth avenue car. A youth of about twenty-one or twenty-two years was also awaiting the car, and he occasionally glanced at the pretty girl, who turned indignantly away from him. When the car stopped the youth stood at the back to assist the maiden to enter, but she wheeled about when she noticed his gallant intention and went in by the front door. The youth smiled languidly, entered the car, and sat down opposite the pretty girl, at the front window whereupon she angrily turned and looked out at the horses.

The conductor observed this pantomime, and regarded the youth with a scowl. When he began to collect fares at the front end, the young lady got out her purse while the youth was feeling in his pocket, and paid her transportation fee. The youth handed the conductor a dime, without noticing that the pretty girl had paid, and said: "Two." The conductor handed him back five with an ugly glance, and the girl looked harder at the horses than ever, whereat the youth smiled with a great deal of amusement. An old gentleman got into the car and sat down near the pretty girl, and the conductor kept his eyes upon the youth. Other passengers entered, and a policeman stood on the platform with the conductor.

Presently the old gentleman noticed that the youth kept his eyes turned upon the pretty girl, and smiled whenever she dared to turn her glance away from the window, and that her eyes fairly plazed with anger as she turned from him. The conductor spoke to the policeman, and policeman, conductor, old gentleman, and all the rest of the passengers began to glance at the youth. The old gentleman was the first to interfere.

"What do you mean, sir," he said, "by annoying this young lady in that outrageous manner?"

The youth stopped smiling and said, softly: "If it isn't too much trouble, I'd be very much oblige if you'd mind your own business."

"You young puppy!" roared the old gentleman. "I'll see to you! I'll see to you! I'll see if young ladies are to be publicly insulted by such ruffians as you are! I'll make an example of you!"

"Oh, don't; please don't do anything!" said the pretty girl imploringly. "Please don't make a scene!"

"My dear young lady," said the old gentleman, gallantly, "you shall not be embarrassed, I assure you; but I have daughters myself, and it is a duty I owe to the public to make an example of this scamp. Conductor!"

The conductor advanced very willingly into the car, followed by the policeman, and all the passengers gazed at the youth, who only smiled more broadly than ever.

"Put this little puppy off the car," said the old gentleman to the conductor.

The conductor rang the bell and said to the youth: "Come, now, git off the kyar!"

"What for?" asked the youth.

"For mashin'," replied the conductor. "Come, now, start, or I'll t'row yer off!"

"If you touch me," said the youth, very quietly, "I'll break your head."

The policeman had been anxiously awaiting his opportunity, and now he saw his chance.

"Well, you won't break my head," he remarked, taking out his club and elbowing the conductor, the old gentleman, and the excited passengers aside, while a crowd collected in the street and looked in the car windows.

"Stop, stop," screamed the pretty girl throwing herself between the youth and the officer. "Ah, please, please don't hurt him. He's my brother!"

"What!" shouted the policeman in a tone of intense disgust.

"What!" echoed the conductor, the old gentleman, the driver, and the rest of the passengers.

"Yes, she's my sister," asserted the youth, seating himself beside her. "And you're all a pack of infernal idiots," he added.

"I don't believe it," the old gentleman, said after a breathless pause. "What were you treating each other in that manner for if you are brother and sister?"

"She's a little mad because I wouldn't take her to the circus this afternoon, that's all," replied the youth.

"And I'm—I'm awfully ashamed of it, too," said the pretty girl, beginning to cry. "And I think you're an awfully stupid old thing to make such a fuss," she added, passionately, to the old gentleman.

"Perhaps" suggested the youth to the conductor, who, with the policeman, still gazed speechlessly upon them; "Perhaps, as you've stopped about a dozen cars behind the funeral may get up to Eleventh Street in the course of the afternoon."

The conductor, utterly crushed, rang the bell. The policeman looked foolish. The old gentleman looked hopelessly cast down, and the other passengers have not ceased yet to congratulate themselves that they did not get an opportunity to take part in the controversy. —New York Times.

Simple Tests for the Purity of Water.

In suspected potable water for persons who cannot command chemical analysis, the following tests are recommended as being generally available and reliable.

Color—Fill a bottle made of colorless glass with the water; look through the water at some black object; the water should appear perfectly colorless and free from suspended matter. A muddy or turbid appearance indicates the presence of soluble organic matter, or of soluble matter in suspension. It should be "clear as crystal."

Odor—Empty out some of the water, leaving the bottle half full; cork up the bottle and place it for a few hours in a warm place; shake up the water, remove the cork and critically smell the air contained in the bottle. If it has any smell, and especially if the odor is in the least repulsive, the water should be rejected for domestic use. By heating the water to boiling, an odor is evolved sometimes that otherwise does not appear.

Taste—Water fresh from the well is usually tasteless, even though it may contain a large amount of putrescible organic matter. Water for domestic use should be perfectly tasteless, and remain so even after it has been warmed, since warming often develops a taste in water which is tasteless when cold. If the water, at any time, has a repulsive or even disagreeable taste, it should be rejected.

Heisch's Test for Sewage Contamination—The delicacy of the sense of smell or taste varies greatly in different individuals; one person may fail to detect the foul contammation of a given water, which would be very evident to a person of finer organization. But if the cause of bad smell or taste exists in water, the injurious effect on health will remain the same, whether recognized or not. Moreover, some water of very dangerous quality will fail to give any indication by smell or taste. For these reasons I attach special importance to Heich's test for sewage contamination or the presence of putrescible organic matter. The test is so simple that any one can use it. Fill a clean pint bottle three-fourths full of the water to be tested, and dissolve in the water a teaspoonful of the purest sugar—loaf or granulated sugar will answer—cork the bottle and place it in a warm place for two days. If in twenty-four to forty-eight hours the water becomes cloudy or muddy, it is unfit for domestic use. If it remains perfectly clear it is probably safe to use.

Love Making In Mexico.

Love making in Mexico is a desperate passion—it is no trifling bit of sentiment. The Mexican is an animal of rude instincts in this matter. In fact Mexicans—I mean the ruling class, the men with white blood in their veins—do not trust each other. As a rule not one of them will trust any other a moment alone either with his wife or daughter.

Before marriage the girl is kept under constant vigilance, not permitted to speak to her lover till he has courted her for months from his perch on horseback, or to be in his presence alone until after marriage. At marriage the father hands over the keys to his daughter's husband and the imprisonment is even more rigorous. For a married woman to receive any man alone in her parlor, even once, is enough to enrage her husband and compromise her reputation. For the Mexican and Spaniard assume that men and women are always vicious if they have an opportunity. I know of a lady at the Hotel Anglais here who stays in her room constantly—as constantly as if the door were locked. Her meals are sent to her and she does not cross the threshold of her room from one week to another, excepting to mass on Sunday. If a Spaniard should call upon her and succeed in getting into her room, even to inquire about her husband, it might seriously damage her good name.

In some cities of the Republic a curious habit prevails of complimenting unknown ladies on the street. Of course the lady is accompanied by father, brother, or duenna and it is considered by all parties quite proper for the passing admirer to say: "How pretty she is!" "What a dainty hand!" or "What fine eyes!" or "What a lovely foot!" Then the object of admiration turns and says to the stranger with her sweetest smile: "Mille gracias, Senor!" (A thousand thanks!) I know gentlemen who have tried this with distinguished success. I have never performed the feat myself, for I am naturally nervous.—Correspondence New York Graphic.

What So-Called "Society" Demands.

In "Friendship," Ouida puts her finger upon the exact line which divides social life from all other kinds of life. For indeed man is both a social and an unsocial animal; there are times when he craves companionship, and times when he wishes to be alone. To regulate this ebb and flow, and to give continuity to the social instinct—this, and this only, is the function of society. In very truth, society is little more than a huge club. As Ouide says: "There are many things to be got by society, and yet, after all it asks very little. Society only asks you to wipe the outside of your cup and platter; inside you may keep any kind of nastiness that you like, only wash the outside; do wash the outside, says Society; and it would be a churl or an ass, indeed, who would refuse so reasonable a request." Now, there is much truth here bitterly expressed. Society is not directly governed by the laws of either God or man, but governed by its own laws. Is a man a scoundrel? If so, can you and are you willing to prove it, not merely to the satisfaction of your own friends, but in an open and notorious way, so that Society may know it, and be authorized to make the necessary moral distinctions? Society is not immoral; rather is it unmoral. And so it happens that a woman may be the mistress of your best friend, and yet, if she be only suspected, if she pays all her party calls, she will remain in society, not because society loves sin, but because sometimes it is utterly unable to exclude it.—Argonaut.

Stopped His Paper.

This anecdote has been reprinted before, in point and substance, but we do not remember seeing the whole related in detail as a reminisence of Mr. Greely. It illustrates one of the traits which gave the great editor of the Tribune the title of "philosopher."

Passing down Newspaper Row, in New York City, one morning he met one of his readers, who exclaimed, "Mr. Greeley, after the article you published this morning, I intend to stop your paper!"

"Oh, no!" said Mr. Greeley don't do that."

"Yes, sir, my mind is made up, and I shall stop the paper." The angry subscriber was not to be appeased, and they separated. Late in the afternoon the two met again, when Mr. Greeley said,—

"Mr. Thompson, I am very glad you did not carry out your threat this morning."

"What do you mean?"

"Why, you said you were going to stop my paper."

"And so I did. I went to the office and had your paper stopped."

"You are surely mistaken. I have just come from there, and the press was running and business booming."

"Sir," said Thomson, very pompously, "I meant I intended to stop my subscription to your paper."

"O!" rejoined Greeley; "I thought you were going to stop the running of my paper and knock me out of business. My friend, let me tell you something. One man is just a drop of water in the ocean. You did not set the machinery of this world in motion, and you can't stop it; and when you are underneath the ground, things upon the surface will wag on just the same as ever."—Yonkers Gazette.

UNDER AN UMBRELLA.

Where I gained it, you may seek it;
Where I told it, you may speak it—
Love that dares both wind and weather
Draws the maid and man together,
Reconciles to April showers
Hastening May and orange flowers—
Love, and I, and Anabella
All were under an umbrella.

Little hands that held fast to me,
Eyes whose glances shot straight through me,
Lips that murmured thanks for kindness,
Cheeks that mocked my feigned resignedness,
Dainty feet that, when they stumbled,
Touched my heart (which never grumbled)—
Love, and I, and Anabella,
All were under an umbrella.

Walked we—talked, till Cupid, weary
Made her answer thus my query:
"Why I like the rainy season?
Oh, because!" She gave the reason.
Then a blush her dimples hallowed—
You may never know what followed!—
Love, and I, and Anabella
All were under an umbrella! —The Current

JACK'S STORY IN CAMP.

It was about three months ago that we received an evening call from Mr. Shuershee.

You must not, however, picture to yourselves a finely dressed gentleman mounting the steps of a handsome house, ringing the door-bell, and presenting his visiting-card. The actual facts of the case are very different.

For several months I had been in poor health, and my doctor had ordered me to engage in some rough, out-door employment. Following his advice, I went to work in a Western lumbering-camp, situated about ten miles north-east of an Indian reservation where the people are descended from the once noble tribe of Chippewas. But most of them have degenerated into dirty-faced, yellow-skinned, disreputable wretches, whose highest ambition is to secure an abundance of whisky and tobacco. Lumbermen despise them most heartily, and appear to consider it their duty to kick them at every opportunity.

One afternoon a storm came on, and by night the rain was pouring in torrents. The men came in from work wet and tired, and not in the best of humor to receive visitors.

The cook, who is usually a very mild-tempered man, was for once in a passion. His wood was wet; his fire only gave out black smoke, which seemed unwilling to leave him, and crowded down the stove-pipe into the room; and he had cut his thumb while peeling potatoes.

We were not, therefore, a very merry or sociable company, as we crowded into the cook's shanty for supper. Few puns were made, and the social and political state of the nation was not so thoroughly discussed as usual. We sat and ate our supper in savage silence.

The meal was about over, when the door opened and in walked an Indian, probably from the reservation. He was as wet as a rat, and looked like a walking mud-puddle. The water stood all over his yellow face, and whenever he stopped for a moment a little pool formed on the floor.

When Mart, the cook, caught sight of him his face turned white with wrath.

The Indian saw that he was not over-welcome, but bowing low he introduced himself,—

"Name Mr. Shuershee! Hungry! Thirsty! Sleepy!" Then turning and pointing out into the darkness, he added, "Rain! Cold! Ugh!"

"We don't want no Injun round here!" cried Mart. "So leave, ye, sneak thief! I guess 'twon't hurt ye to let the rain wash ye off fer onct," and catching up a large stick of wood, he started toward "Mr. Shuershee."

That gentleman did not wait for him, but slunk towards the door like a whipped dog, leaving behind him as he went a little river on the floor. Mart followed the poor creature to the door, and raised his foot to kick him down the steps.

But just as he was about, as he expressed it, to "raise the Injun on end," a rough voice shouted, "Stop thar!" and Mart stopped his foot in mid air from sheer surprise. Gruff old Jack stood by the table, with his grizzled beard standing out stiff with anger.

"Let that rascally fellow alone!" he shouted.

There was something in his manner that made Mart hesitate. Jack was by all odds the roughest man in camp. He was a great, cross-grained old fellow, tough as a pine-knot and as surly as a dog. He had never been known, before, to stand by any one, and so he jumped up to take the part of a despised "Injun," we knew not what was coming next.

Jack strode across the room, thrust the wondering Mart aside, and pulled poor "Mr. Shuershee" in, out of the rain.

"Come in you, whatever your name is," said he, "come in and set down and eat, or I'll make ye!"

The "noble savage" hardly knew whether he was awake or dreaming. But Jack pushed him into a seat, picked off his hat and threw it under the table, and placed the best supper he could find before him.

Then he turned to the rest of us, who were looking on in utter amazement, and said,—

"Ef any of ye has anything to say about this, say so, and I'll pay the bill!"

No one said a word—Jack was too large and tough, and his fist was too heavy, to admit of much argument. Jack watched the Indian as a dog might watch his master's coat, and when he had eaten enough, thrust his hand into his pocket and pulled out a plug of his best tobacco. This he put into "Mr. Shuershee's" hand, and then pushed him into a seat by the fire.

Then he took some blankets from his own bunk and threw them in a corner, with a gruff, "Turn in there and sleep, ye Injun!"

"Mr. Shuershee" said nothing to all this, but when his bed was pointed out, he curled up in it like a dog, and was soon asleep.

It almost seemed as if the end of the world must be at hand when Jack would help an "Injun." There was evidently something on his mind. He seemed to feel that some explanation was due, and it did not surprise us when he took his pipe from his mouth and blurted out,—

"I s'pose ye think I'm a fool for what I done to that Injun!"

"Yes, we does, and I'd like to know what he's done fer ye," said Mart, with the air of one who feels that his dignity has been ruffled.

"Well," said Jack, [illegible] wait till ye hear what an Injun done for me onct, and ye'll never say a word."

"Ef he done ye any good," said Mart, "it'll be the first time I ever heerd of an Injun doin' a favor."

"That's jest it," said Jack. "Ye jest kick 'em around and swear at 'em, but did ye ever give 'em a man's show? Ye knows ye never done it, and so ye aint found out that underneath every skin, be it white, black, or yaller, they is some part of a man.

"Twenty year ago, I worked up on the Pere Marquette, in one of the roughest camps they was there. I was rough in them days, I tell ye—rougher'n I be now. I didn't care nothin' for nobody, and nobody cared for me.

"I was king-bee of the gang because I could fight, and didn't care who or what I fit with. I was risky and darin', jest to show what I could do.

"Wall, one day, in a snow-storm, 'long come a Injun, hungry ez a bear and ragged as a hemlock tree. He come draggin' hisself along to the cook's shanty and asked for somethink to eat.

"The boys hated a Injun ez they hated poison; and when they see that rascal a-humpin' hisself along, they jest grabbed him and dragged him around that clearin', kickin' and poundin' him, till he dropped all in a heap, and then they crowded round him, jest ez they would round a wild critter.

"I dunno what made me do it! p'raps it was because I wanted to git into a fight, or because I was so queer; but out I jumped and says I,—

"What ye tormentin', this poor critter fer?"

"Poor critter!' says one of the men. 'He aint only a Injun. What's the harm kickin a Injun?"

"Try it, and I'll show ye what's harm!' I says.

"But he didn't care to try, so I picked the critter up and 'lowed I'd attend to the next man ez hit him.

"It's strange why I done it, fer I'd kicked 'em myself time and again. But I tuck that Injun and giv' him somethink to eat.

"He trembled jest like a leaf, and ate like a wolf, a-grumblin' and mutterin, to hisself all the time. I tuck him into the woods away from the boys, and started him off. Jest afore he went, he grunted out some of his Injun nonsense about not forgettin' and all that.

"He went off makin signs like ez how he remembered it all. The boys picked on me fer a spell, but arter a while it kinder blowed over."

We were all listening intently. The rain beat on the roof of the shanty and dropped slowly from the eaves. Jack's pipe had gone out, and he sat with his face in the shadow, talking as one talks to himself.

"Well, nigh on three weeks arter this, the boss tells me to start out and blaze a road from the camp to a crick, nigh on three miles away. I set off at noon, and worked to the crick, and then started back on the blazin'.

"But jest ez I started back thar come up the fiercest storm ye ever see. How it did snow! and cold, and so dark ye couldn't see ahead at all.

"I went on, a-floppin' over logs and brush, till I come to a place whar three big logs hed ben blowed down by the wind, so that they jest hung together. I climbed onto the top one, when somehow the old thing fell kerflummux, and down I went with it atop of me.

"I laid thar with that log on my leg. I judged my leg was broke by the way it felt, and I alone in that woods!

"The snow come down like a cloud over me, and the wind went a-singin' through the trees in a dreadful lonesome way. I laid thar a-thinkin' of every thing I hed ever done. How a man will think in such a place!

"I hed gin up about all hope, when I heard a-rustlin' in the bushes clost by me, and something or nuther come out whar I was. It come up clost to me and began to feel of me, and I see it was a man. Then he began to jabber in Injun, and I knowed it was one of them yaller fellers; and I thinks, 'It's one of them rascals ez I've abused, and now how he'll jump round and yell to see me a-layin' here!'

"But ez he jabbered away in his Injun talk, I knowed I hed heerd his voice afore, and I says, 'Who be ye, anyway?' And when he come out with his 'Me not forgit,' I knowed it was that Injun I had fit for.

"Then I sez, 'Roll that log off my leg will ye?' and he worked as Injun never did afore at that log, and at last off it come. I couldn't step on that leg at all, and afore I knowed it I got ez faint and ez weak ez a rag, and ef it hadn't ben fer that Injun I should hev fell smack over.

"He ketched me round the body, and afore I knowed he hed me on his back a-walking off with me.

"How it did storm! It was the wust storm ye ever see! It got worse and worse, and soon I heard the Injun puff and blow like a pig. Then down he come over a root and I with him. But up he got agin and staggered on, stumblin' and fallin' along, till at last he fell and laid still, like a dead man. Then I give up fer lost, and somehow it all turned darker round me.

"Bimeby he roused up, and crawled round and brushed away the snow near a hemlock tree, and dragged me up to it. Then he buit a shelter of brush over me, and laid down like a dog in front of it.

"Onct the poor critter roused up and tuck off his coat and throwed it over me and I was so lifeless I couldn't say a word agin it.

"Then he was about played out, I guess, and he laid down agin in the face of the storm and clost up to me, to keep the snow from blowin' onto me. Thar we laid all night in the storm and the dark and the cold; and when at last the sun come up, thar lay the camp within sight and hearin'. I yelled ez loud ez I could, and the boys come out and tuk me in.

"Thar was a big heap of snow betwixt me and the wind, and ez I kicked out my foot it run agin sumthin'. They brushed off the snow and thar was that Injun, layin' thar with his yaller face peekin' up through the snow, dead as a stone."

"Froze, eh?" said Mart.

"Yer right he hed; thar he had laid and froze, to keep me alive. I dunno what the best Christian white man could have done more'n that. I've often wished I could pay him back somehow or nother. Injuns may be rascals, but I never want now to hev 'em kicked and abused. And arter that, tetch another Injun while I'm round, ef ye dare!"

There was something in Jack's throat as he finished, and then he turned his face away and drew the back of his hand over his eyes. There was not one to laugh at him. Mart looked at the sleeping Indian in the corner, and then took a blanket from his own bunk, and threw it over him. Then he turned to the men and said,—

"The man ez licks an Injun in this camp hez got to lick me too! I more'n half believe they wouldn't be such rascals ef we'd treat 'em like human bein's once in a while. Boys, let's give 'em a fair show."

And ever since that night, Indians in need of food or shelter have never been turned away from our camp; and in consequence, no doubt, of fair treatment, we find them far "rascally" than they used to be.—Youth's Companion.

A Fireman's Act of Daring.

Portland Dispatch in the Boston Globe.

The fire last night destroyed a block owned by A. L. E. Clapp. In the midst of the fire some men went into an upper room and removed a keg of powder, carrying it through the flames and preventing an explosion. "The credit of taking the powder out of the burning building does not belong to me," said Samuel Thurston, fireman, to-day. "That was the act of Elisha G. Peterson." "Samuel Thurston was within three feet of the powder at the time and kept his place at the pipe," said a fireman. "When Peterson went by Sam he said: 'There's a keg of powder there.' Said Sam: 'Get it out; my place is here,' and there he staid." "Peterson saved at least twenty-five men," said Chief Engineer Cloyes. "There were fully that number on the ladders front and rear and of pipeman in the building. Samuel Thurston was at the end of the pipe close by the keg. The room was full of fire, and it was dropping down from overhead at the moment when Peterson performed his heroic act. Had that powder exploded it is simply impossible to say how great the loss of life might have been."

Mr. Peterson is about 45. He said: "I knew where it was, and, of course, I had to get it out. And I can't see that I deserve any credit for doing it." Others think differently upon that point however. Peterson rushed up stairs and took the powder from the flames himself, and carried it in his arms, through a room full of fire, to the open air.

Ruskin's Eccentricities.

Mr. Ruskin is a curiosity. He is seldom to be seen anywhere. Even in his own beloved lake district he takes his walks in the gray of the morning or the dusk or the evening. He seldom goes into society. He loves the theater, and goes when he feels he can indulge himself with such recreation. Perhaps not fifty of these well-known people have ever seen Mr. Ruskin before. He comes into the room in the midst of a half dozen gentlemen, not in the usual seemly fashion of the English procession on such occasions. I saw him when he entered the room, but who was before him, behind him or beside him I could not now say, for they all came together and the distinguished scholar and critic was like the master in the great picture of Veronesi, "The marriage of Cana." He was "in the midst thereof." Ruskin is just 65 years old, and he looks and acts like a man of 45. He is not more than five feet five inches in hight. Indeed he is petit. His complexion originally, I should judge of what remains of a complexion, was fair, though now his face nearly up to his eyes is covered with an iron gray beard; the abundant hair is unconventionally long, and though he was personally neat and "trim," his hair seemed to have had no recent speaking acquaintance with a brush. The forehead is low and retreating; the eyes gray and sparkling—quizzing and mischievous.—Robert Laird Collier.

Dr. John Hall and his Wealthy Parishioner.

Rev. Dr. John Hall is pastor of the wealthiest congregation in America—the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian. He is Scotch, and, therefore, uncompromising in his principles, which are regarded as always of the best. He gets $15,000 a year and a parsonage worth $5,000 more from the church. He is paid $5,000 to write for Bonner's story paper, and he draws a salary as president of an educational institution. Therefore you can see that he is fixed comfortably for life, so far as income is concerned. But there is a widow, Mrs. R. L. Stuart, possessing $7,000,000. She is very old, and her declining days are largely devoted to benevolence. Dr. Hall is her pastor and her adviser in benefaction. Her residence is, in some respects, as fine as a palace. It contains wonders in Gobelin tapestries, elaborate frescoing and massively rich furniture. The venerable lady is not in the least frivolous, and yet one of her diversions is the beautifying of her home. She will spread $10,000 on the walls of a room, and, before the paint is fairly dry, cover it with something different but equally expensive. The drawing-room has just been decorated in white, gold and rose pink, with a frescoed ceiling dotted by vivid little Spanish pictures. Right under this layer of fresh art lies the painting that was done no more than a year ago. At the top of the house is an octagonal room, something like an observatory, from which the whole of Central Park can be reviewed. This is Mrs. Staurt's place of laziness. What I set out to tell, however, was that she has provided in her will for the giving of this remarkable property to Dr. Hall—New York Correspondent of the Buffalo Express.

She Waited Forty Years.

The handsomest girl in [illegible] county, Ga., became engaged nearly 40 years ago, to John Gross, the son of a wealthy planter. Shortly after the engagement was announced Gross went to New Orleans on business, forgot his lady love, settled in Texas, and did not return home until two years later. Though the lady had not heard a word from him in all that time, she was still true. They renewed the engagement, then quarreled, and Gross went off again. He remained away until a few days ago, when he returned to the old homestead to celebrate his 60th birthday. He found his fiancee still waiting and promptly married her. She had refused many offers of marriage during his absence. Three men whom she had refused became respectively a con- [illegible]

NOTES FOR THE FARM AND HOUSE.

Variety of Household Things.

Ventilated bedclothes is one of the latest inventions of English genius. They are perforated, and permit the vapor from the body to escape.

Waste-paper baskets are made of Chinese straw painted in floral designs with oils, the same syle being seen in racks for paper, doors for cupboards, &.

Dainty little sweeping caps are made out of old silk handkerchiefs gathered to fit the head, the four points being brought back to the top of the head and held by a bow of ribbon.

Knit portieres are made from strips of silk dresses that have outlived their usefulness, or such other pieces of silk as might be at hand can be utilized. These portieres have quite the effect of oriental stuffs.

For fancy work we find peacock feathers among the favored decorations. They are used on panels, lambrequins, table scarfs, ect., and are painted, embroidered, and the real feathers may be applied with very artistic results.

Birch bark canoes, lined with tin and planted with ferns, or filled with cut flowers and trailing vines, suspended from the chandelier, have a very pretty affect, in conjunction with other decorations, for evening entertainments.

Ash grows more and more in favor in furniture in one's country house, aspecially as some intelligent observer has found out that the Duke of Sutherland's house in Devon, you know, has ash furniture. The fashion has no reference to ash barrels.

A pretty little novelty may be made from an ordinary hanging rack. Make a lambrequin for it in colors corresponding with your room. Underneath the top center plaited piece may be made a neat hiding place for scissors. spool cotton and articles needed in every room.

Now decorative wall papers simulate to perfection bronze, brass, old and black silver, old gold and tinted metals, while the designs for friezes, dados and decorations are made up of a mixture, conventionalized and realistic in high and low relief, in the style of the best repousse and carved work.

Japanese bottles with long necks are made into hand-screens by ingenious girls, and the manner in which it is done is by placing in the necks of each bottle an open fan. The bottle and neck and handle may be covered with silk, thus concealing the joining point. The screen may be placed beneath a lamp to shield the eyes from the light.

Some of the prettiest shades for glass globes are made out of pale-pink gauze put plainly on the globe, first being doubled three or four times. The edge about both sides is gathered and then drawn down tightly and tied. It is sometimes necessary to fasten the top with a little mucilage or gum. Transparent birds and flowers are often pasted on the gauze, but the plain pink looks best.

The circular wall decoration made of three Japanese folding fans, disjointed and fastened with the paper part within and the sticks darting out in radii, is still prettier as a ceiling center piece. In this case the knot of ribbon in the center of the ornament is dispensed with. The chandelier passes through the hole. Still prettier it is as a bedroom ornament, where there is no central chandelier, but a Japanese lantern is hung from the center piece.

But pottery, faience or china collected in cabinets or arranged on shelves are employed with a wrong idea of their purpose. Displayed in this manner the display is outdone by every bric brac dealer in town. The use of these articles in a room is to brighten it up. Nothing, says Sidney Smith, does so much to make a room cheerful as a little china or trifles of the kind, and hence all such objects should be brought into our homes with this purpose soley in view.

A very pretty shade for a chandelier globe is made of a band of bright satin ribon two inches wide, gathering slightly at the upper edge to fit just above the largest part of the globe. The lower edge is bordered with antique lace about three inches in width, finished with a fringe of embroidery silk of the color of the ribbon, knotted into its pointed or scalloped edge. A chandelier of three globes has shades repeating the colors of the furniture, one with ribbon and fringe of crimson, another of yellow, and the third of dull blue.

Pretty mantel valances are now the fashion and every room in the house must be adorned with one. For housekeepers who have not time to sit down and embroider or crochet them, very tasteful ones are made out of pretty flowered chintz which comes in stripes 8 or 10 inches broad. One seen at a cosy home was in pink and deep brown stripes with moss roses scattered on each, which, at a little distance, looked as though embroidered. A fringe of blue, brown, pink and white worsted was crocheted to the edge, and the whole was fastened on a valence-board with silver headed tacks.

Agricultural Items.

Mr. Nimmo's recent conclusions are especially cited as "a damper upon the trichinosis shriekers":

"He inquired of the Health Departments of the large cities, and the reports cover not less than five years in any case, and some of them run back to 1834, and in all the vast aggregate of deaths in all this time in all the sections only about ten have died of trichinosis. If trichinae cannot do worse than this, it deserves no more censure than hunks of beefsteak that have choked men to death."

The common practice of breeding only from second brood turkeys, and those that are not fit to kill at New Years, is a very short sighted policy. In nothing will a good selection pay better than in breeding this noble bird. In the wild state, where the "survival [illegible] acre, and a bushel of them will go further in making growth than a bushel of corn, because peas, being nitrogenous, supply all the wants of the system and make a healthful and firm flesh, whereas corn goes more to fat, which is not so good for food and makes softer pork with more waste in the cooking. He sows black-eyed marrowfats, with the ground in good condition, broadcast or with a drill, using two to two and a half bushels per acre. His time is in the old of the moon in May.

"A contented mind is a continual feast." This true old adage was written many ages ago; it was true then, it is as true now. But what makes it peculiarly interesting to the farmer is the fact that it is just as true when applied to animals as when to humanity; so, if we would have our fattening animals do the very best on the feed given, if we would have the cows give the most milk and make the most butter possible for the feed consumed, we must see to it that everything about their quarters, as well as their food and attendance, are all such as to make them perfectly contented and happy. Contentment pays, in stock or owner.

Raise Delicious Strawberries.

There are but very few people who cannot eat strawberries, the most delicious and wholesome of all small fruits. More berries of this one kind are grown and consumed than of all other small fruits combined, ripening as they do the first of all kinds of fruit in the year when the appetite craves a vegetable diet. They are generally eaten by three-fourths of the people with a greater relish than any other berry.

The variety of soil is of no great importance to many of the most productive varieties, rather a light, sandy loam, with a clay subsoil, being generally preferred. For the large, late, high-flavored varieties, a strong, heavy soil is best, arranged so that water can be freely given in the fruiting season in case of drouth. When your soil is selected, prepare it in fall or spring by working into it well decayed manure. Bone ashes or phosphates can be used if no other fertilizer is at hand. Mark your rows about two feet apart for garden culture, and three feet apart for field culture, setting the plants one foot apart in the rows.

Now select your varieties, which you can do yourself, or leave to any reliable grower of experience to select for you. Set out at least two varieties, and if three or four, all the better, to get the best flavored berries, as well as the early, medium, late and most productive kinds. Occasionally give the new sorts a trial, if well recommended, as many are gradually taking the place of older ones. They can be set in the fall or spring, but if set in the fall, protect by a light covering for winter. For August and September planting the pot grown plants are the most sure to produce a crop the following season.

Stir the soil often, once every two weeks, and keep off all runners. Stirring the soil encourages growth, and keeps free fromweeds. By fallyou will have large stools one foot in diameter, capable of yielding from a pint to a quart to each plant, if kept in hills and good care has been given. Cover your plants in the fall as soon as the ground has frozen for winter, in this section from the fifteenth to the twenty-fifth of November, with fine hay, coarse straw manure, pine or any evergreen boughs, to shade the ground and prevent thawing and freezing heaving the plant and injuring the fruit germ.

Remove the covering in spring as soon as the heavy frosts are over, or leave for mulching during the fruiting season, to protect the fruit and keep down weeds. Be careful not to disturb the soil while the plants are in bloom, and not till they are done fruiting. Then fork and spade the ground, working in liberally well decayed manure or other fertilizers to prepare growth for another season.

The following will be found among the best well-tried varieties to plant for family use to ripen fruit in succession: Longfellow, the earliest and best flavored; Crescent, early to medium; Sharpless, Charles Downing, Miner's Prolific, Bidwell, all are of fine flavor, good to yield, medium to late in ripening. The late varieties are Seth Boyden, J. Queen, Kentucky and Manchester, and, really, the Manchester is the best, largest, most prolific, and firmest berry, yet well tested. The new varieties, James Vick, Garfield, and Atlantic, have their special merits and are worthy of trial.

It is understood that this season the Concord School of Philosophy will issue pamphlets bearing such titles as will make them read even by the young, and in spite of the abstruse subjects discussed. To catch the restless eye of the youthful lover of yellow literature, these new works will probably be entitled "Pretty Protoplasm," or "Mad Mike, the Avenging Molecule of Massachusetts," or "Bully Bill, the Bacteria."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

One of the most curious customs that attract the attention of strangers in Panama is to see the native women walking along the streets smoking long, slender cigars, in much the same fashion as men do here. It is the custom of the people there, and especially of the women, to gather in the public markets as early as sunrise to gossip, talk over affairs while enjoying their morning smoke.

Recent Roman Catholic statistics show that in England the numerical strength of that church has nearly trebled during the last forty years, while in America the increase is nearly tenfold. The United States is, in fact, the more promising portion of the Pope's spiritual domain. There are 6,628,176 Catholics this year, against 630 360 in 1840. The large aggregate includes all nominal Catholics and baptised children.

If the oleomargarine men do not look to their rights, bad butter may drive their goods out of market. A few days ago a Brooklyn man bought for butter something that was not to his liking, so he sued the seller for giving him oleomargarine. He might have gained his suit, for two dealers pronounced the stuff oleomargarine, but a number of experts agree that it was genuine dairy butter.

Emergency lectures have made a fair showing in the efficiency of the Philadelphia police. At a recent meeting of the Society for Organizing Charity, nine members of the force were presented with medals for their service in arresting hemorrhages, putting splints on and setting broken limbs, distinguishing between drunkenness and sickness, reviving persons who were insensible from inhaling poisonous gases.

The valuation of Boston property has been raised $10,000,000 to a total of $632,000,000, and the levy for state, county and city purposes reaches $12,460,380, an increase over the previous year of $2,578,019, or nearly twenty-five per cent. This is at the rate of $18 per $1,000, or one and one eight-tenths per cent.

"A pronouncing bee" took place at a church sociable in this city recently, which was both exciting and instructive. The competitors were subjected to severe tests. They were locked in a room and brought out singly to read eight sentences printed on slips of paper, and which contained, among other words, "soot, depot, babe, acclimated, aspirant, Asiatic, disputants, conversant, financiers, irrefragible, altercation, indisputable, irreparable, indicatory, blatant, blackguard, complainant, coadjutor, incomparable, diagnosis, bronchitis, gastritis, periostritis, menginitis, menhitis and morphine."

The following is given as a ready method of testing water for sewage contamination: A clean pint bottle is to be filled three-quarters full of the water to be examined; in this a teaspoonful of pure white sugar is to be dissolved. Granulated or loaf sugar is good enough for the purpose. The bottle is then corked and placed in a warm spot for two days. If in twenty-four or forty-eight hours it becomes cloudy or muddy, it is unfit for domestic use; if it remains clear it is probably safe to use. This method is known as Heisch's test for sewage contamination.

Concerning bitters our excellent exchange, The Health and Home, says: "Under the saintly garb of medicine the market has been flooded for years. Men and women swallow them by the tubful under the belief or pretext that they are taking a tonic. When a man stops openly before a saloon bar and calls for a drink he knows that he is taking intoxicating drink. But the bitters are taken under the dim delusion that they are taking medicine, and yet to get a single dose of the medicine one has to swallow a gallon of vile stuff."

Concerning Tact.

From the Boston Courier.

The noble creature man yet lacks one or two points of being perfect, and among these may be counted a rather general absence of tact. To most women tact is inborn; to very few men is it even possible to acquire it.

The femine mind, it is true, delights overmuch, as a general thing, in crooked speech. An evasion is a delight, and a white lie a fearful joy. Man, on the contrary—man au natural—is painfully blunt and honest. It might almost be said, indeed, that the very best men cannot possess tact. It is an impossibility to their natures. The habit of thought before speech cannot be acquired. A hearty, genial college professor, most well-intentioned and tactless of men, was requested by his wife to entertain a lady visitor until the hostess herself had finished her toilet. Descending to the reception room, our professor beamed upon the guest with a smile whose kindly warmth must have gone far to overcome the effects of the wild storm which raged outside. "A terrible day, professor," began the lady, with a pleasant smile. "Indeed it is madame," the honest gentleman rejoined; "a wild day. I was just saying to my wife that those who had homes to-day better stay in them." A sudden rigidity settled upon the countenance of the lady, and the professor could not understand why she listened so coldly to his description of a new variety of fern which he had recently discovered.

Rather worse than the professor was a mild old pastor with a small and peppery wife. So small she was that if she wished to touch his toe at the dining table, in conjugal warning, she was obliged to slip far down in her chair, almost disappearing from view. At the same instant a corresponding rise might be observed in the pastor. He also betrayed himself by a hurried "Eh, my dear? What?" Upon being admonished that this would not do, he promised to mend. Very soon a brother clergyman dined with him, and, absorbed in discussion of the lost tribes, he unconsciously served to his guest [illegible] man would become placid, and many a home be free from unpleasant contretempts, if only the muster could be gifted with a bit of that divine possession, tact.

Things Condensed.

In an article by Charles F. Twing on "Gifts to Colleges and Universities," recently published, it is stated that the amount contributed to college and university education in the United States during the past ten years is $35,622,000, and since 1847 the total amount given has not been less than $50,000,000.

The United States Government owes the State of New Jersey seventy-three cents with interest thereon since 1861, the state having paid an excess of the amount assessed upon it for direct taxes to carry on the war in 1861. The interest amounts to niny-seven cents and six mills, and at the present time the sum of $1 70.6 stands to the credit of the state on this account on the books of the treasury. An act of congress would be necessary, however, in order to have the debt paid off.

Moonshine Whiskey is whiskey made in secret without paying tax to the Government. Living in what is called a whiskey neighborhood, I know it is made in isolated spots on mountain sides, and in deep ravines, every winter and spring. The stills are a curse to the country. Is it any wonder that men drink whiskey, when for weeks and months together their diet is corn meal and coffee, and often little of that? Whiskey is one luxury, and they will risk anything to get it. The Rugby school company, limited, of Rugby, Tenn., is about to engage in an important educational venture. This is the establishment of a school for boys at Rugby, Tenn., in connection of the university of the south at Sewanee, for the southern and central states of the union. It is intended that the schools will offer an opportunity to Americans, and to the numerous English families, who are settling in these states, of obtaining for their sons an education such as is offered by the public schools of England.

It is recommended that "young early chickens be fed cooked bran and meal, alternated with bread crumbs and finely chopped, hard boiled eggs. If the meal can be scalded in milk so much the better. To insure thrift, the chicks should be fed five or six times a day until five or six weeks old. Wheat should be given as soon as they will eat it, though rice is the best of all grains. In order successfully to raise earlyhatched chickens, three things are indispensable—heat, proper food and cleanliness."

An Irish paper, the Dublin Farmer's Gazette, publishes a statement in support of the position that it is exceedingly difficult for ordinary judges to tell butter from butterine. The story is that some excellent Normandy butter, costing 48 cents a pound, and a sample of butterine, bought of a local retailer for 22 cents a pound, were submitted to a jury of nineteen farmers, who tasted and examined both samples. Ten out of these nineteen judges declared the butterine to be the butter.

It is estimated that 500,000,000 tons of the South Carolina phosphate rock are within reach of profitable working. The supply of bones for furnishing phosphate is running low, and phosphate rock makes a fair substitute. Though called a rock, the South Carolina deposits were undoubtedly once the bones and shells of marine animals, and rank next to bones in fertilizing properties, though of course, having now no nitrogen in their composition. About 300,000 tons of this deposit were shipped north last year. The results are so favorable, and the supply can be so cheaply obtained, that this amount is likely to largely increase.

Dr. Wilson says in the Southern World that it is a mistaken idea that no fruit should be eaten at breakfast. In the morning there is an acrid taste of the secretions, and nothing is so well calculated to correct it as peaches, apples etc. The small-seeded fruits, such as figs, blackberries, raspberries, and strawberries, may be classed among the best fruits and medicines. The sugar in them is nutritious, the acid purifying and the seeds laxative. We should look more to our gardens for our medicines, and less to our drug stores.

Eloquent French Preacher.

Pere Monsabre, who is probably the most eloquent preacher in France, is thus described by Mr. James Stephens in the Philadelphia Times: "He looks to me to be a man of forty-five years of age. He is well built, has a fine, open, healthy countenance, and a voice strong enough to fill the cathedral and musical enough to charm the ear. He preaches in Notre Dame only six Sundays in the year—that is to say, on the six Sundays of Lent. He spends the remainder of the year in one of the houses of his order in Brittany or Normandy, preparing his sermons, which he writes and rewrites, and commits well to memory. For each sermon he receives the modest stipend of a thousand francs, which, of course, according to the rules of the religious community to which he belongs, he hands over immediately to the bureau of the Dominicans for general use of the order."

White Mountain Weather.

There was one place in New England where the weather last month was only ordinary. It was the tip-top place, the summit of Mount Washington. The total wind movement up there in March was only 24,525 miles, which is 2,065 miles than the March average. The greatest velocity attained was 122 miles an hour, on the 12th. The temperature ranged from 28 degrees below on the 1st to 41.6 degrees an the 12th, and the mean for the month was 12.2 degrees, which is 1.1 degree above the average for March. Rain or snow fell on twenty days, and at the end of the [illegible]

The insurance men are not in the best humor and propose to raise the rates to figures that will meet losses and give accustomed dividends.

Almost the entire revenue received in Great Britain from customs is from less than a dozen articles. There was a gain of two per cent. in the total revenue last year, which reached £116,972,785. This increase was due to larger importations of tea and spirits. While the consumption of wine was smaller, the use of coffee and tea increased materially, a fact which ought to afford pleasure to temperance people. The import duties are mainly from tea, rum, brandy, wine, fruits, tobacco and cigars, and coffee, in about the order named.

The Providence Journal, great authority on astronomy, has been tracing the "star of Bethlehem," and finds that what may have been that star has appeared twenty-four times in the last two thousand years, and that there is a possibility that the long lost star of Bethlehem, the Pilgrim Star, the Star of 1572, or Tycho Brahe's Star—for it is known by all these names—will once more become a shining wonder in the sky. Such a celestial visitor will be warmly welcomed by astronomers, and far more acceptable than a great comet spanning the heavens with its gossamer tail.

The last army scandal created by the conduct of Gen. Swaim and Col. Morrow is deeply regretted by honorable officers everywhere and by the friends of the army. Many of these things are due to the growth of luxury and extravagance at the seat of government, where many officers are necessarily located and are expected to maintain the highest position in fashionable life without regard to the question of financial ability to do so. To a lesser degree these unfortunate conditions are felt in every department, even to the remotest and most secluded posts. There is evident need of a reform that shall remove the cause of these frequent scandals, and that reform must come from the officers themselves, and not from outside influences.

The difficulty of reaching personal property for the purpose of taxation has made this question a lively issue in some of the eastern states, and a Massachusetts legislative committee has agreed to report a bill for a tax of two per cent. on all property real and personal, either by will or without, the tax to be paid by the administrator of the estate before he pays over its proceeds to the heirs, exempting a fixed amount of $5,000. It has the merit of reaching personal property once in a generation to say the least. Vermont made a very stringent law several years ago, and the result has been that personal property in that state now pays its share of taxes into the state and local treasuries. In the cities and large towns at the west personal property in many cases virtually escapes taxation, owing the difficulty of reaching it and the prevalence of perjury on the part of the owners and gross negligence or worse, on the part of assessors.

The Ohio State Forestry Association has lately issued a pamphlet of some sixty-four pages, entitled "Trees and Tree-planting," which contains much matter which, if generally read, could do much to arouse the people to the importance of the subject. No part of the matter presented would do more, probably, to show the seriousness of the danger which lies in the destruction of American forests than that giving concisely the results of the deforestation of other lands, and this is done by reference to Palestine which was, when Joshua conquered the Promised Land, a country of wonderful fertility, having a delightful climate and with its mountains covered by forests. The forests have been cut down, the Jordan has dwindled to an insignificant stream, and the country is not able to sustain one-sixth of such a population as it supported in abundance in the time of Solomon. Similar results from the same cause are reported in Spain, Sicily, Italy, and in every part of the habitable world where man has [illegible]

The general supposition is that the man committed suicide. Engineer Horn, who was driving the engine at the time, says the man had plenty of time to jump the track, but instead of doing so threw his arms wildly about him, and then folded them, and awaited the arrival of the engine. The body was horribly mutilated.

The financial disaster that has just overtaken Gen. Grant in Wall street probably furnishes the motive for Senator Edmunds' renewal of the proposition to place him upon the retired list of the army with the rank of general. This is in effect a proposition to vote him a pention of nearly $10,000 per year. Without reference to the new reasons for national generosity toward Gen. Grant, such a pention would be a slight recognition of his eminent military services to the nation, measured by the customary standards in other countries.

The Big British Royal Scandal.

London, Special.—The mystery of the morganatic marriage deepens. The latest report which reached London this evening from responsible sources at Windsor is to the effect that the Grand Duke Louis IV. did marry the fascinating divorced Mme. De Kalamire in consequence of a promise exhorted from him by the lady. This fact it is understood, the grand duke admitted to his mother-in-law in a confession which the queen drew from him at Darmstadt. The reason why he gave this promise is variously stated. Some say his gallantries with Mme. De Kalamire had gone to the verge of indiscretion, and he had thus given her a power over him which she had not hesitated to use. According to others the lady has successfully worked upon the fears of the grand duke, who was parlcularly anxious to have no breath of the threatened scandal mar the marriage fete of his daughter the Princess Victoria, and that Mme. De Kalamire has played the part of a successful blackmailer. Queen Victoria has, however, pardoned the grand duke on the strength of his explanation as to the limited character of his matrimonial alliance with the Russian widow; and he has entered into an obligation that the marriage shall not be consummated, and that his relations with Mme. De Kalamire shall be deemed to have terminated with the performance of the marriage ceremony which took place between them. These explanations but intensify the scandal which attaches to the whole affair, and the queen's conduct is bitterly censured. The grand duke is still basking in the royal favor at Windsor castle, and is again looked upon as a candidate for the hand of Princess Beatrice, always provided the peers pass the "deceased wife's sister" bill.

A Very Ignoble Nobleman.

London, Special: Another lordly libertine has come to grief. Edward Burtenshaw Sugden, Lord St. Leonards, of Slaugham hall, was arrested on Tuesday, the 6th, at Brentford, charged with committing a rape upon one Miss Emma Cole, a pretty young domestic in the service of a family friend of his lordship, whom he had been visiting. The circumstances of the assault were outrageously brutal, and the Brentford gentleman whose hospitality had been so shamefully abused, was foremost in bringing the scamp to justice. The preliminary examination was conducted at Brentford before two magistrates, who were so horrified at the details that were proved against Lord St. Leonards, with hardly an effort on his part to deny them, that they instantly ordered him to be fully committed for trial at the next assizes and firmly refused all offers of bail. Lord St. Leonard's solicitors offered any amount of bail, and protested in horrified tones against sending a baron of England to the common jail, but the magistrates were inexorable, and his lordship now languishes in Brentford prison.

Sensational Failures in New York.

New York, Special:—The Marine National bank and Grant & Ward, brokers, failed Tuesday. The firm of Grant & Ward is composed of Gen. U. S. Grant, James D. Fish, U. S. Grant, Jr., and Ferdinand Ward. The failures made certainly the most sensational event of the year. Age and youth went down together, for the bank had withstood the panics of 1870 and 1873, and the firm was one of the youngest and most energetic on the street. An interesting and painful incident of the brokers' failure was that it threatened to carry with it the personal fortune of Gen. Grant, who was a full partner of the concern, and who, should the other partners be unable to assume its liabilities, can be held for the $750,000 supposed to be involved.

James D. Fish, president of the bank, is well known as one of the largest real estate speculators in that city. He bought Booth's theater building some time ago, tore down the granite front, and replaced it with a fine brick facade, and converted the lower floor into a magnificent store, which was first occupied last week. He built also a fine set of flats at Thirty-ninth and Broadway, and the Casino, one of the handsomest places of amusement in this country. His real estate speculations were the constant wonder of conservative dealers. Mr. Fish also had a large interest in the St. Louis & San Francisco road, of which he was vice president, and was intimately connected with the West Shore, Ontario & Western, and other such enterprises.

William Smith, broker of the firm of Grant & Ward, said the losses of the firm would be something between $500,000 and $800,000. Each of the four partners held a quarter interest in the firm to the extent of $100,000 each, and Gen. Grant would be liable for his share of losses, which would probably be $250,000. Among the creditors of the Marine bank are the cotton exchange, which had $40,000 on deposit, and the coffee exchange, whose account was only $8,600. No other exchanges are affected by the failure. President Hatch of the stock exchange stated that he did not think the failure would have any influence in affecting the price of stocks. The records of the register's office show that James D. Fish has borrowed $100,000 from the First National bank upon the Mystic flats, on West Thirty-ninth street, and that U. S. Grant Jr. has sold property in Seventy-third street, purchased by him recently for $97,500, to S. M. Hamilton.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

The house, after a long debate, passed the bill covering defects in the Chinese bill. The amendments provide for a passport system substantially identical with that contained in the vetoed twenty-year bill; all Chinese to be required, before entering or leaving the United States, to provide themselves with certificates containing a detailed description of their personal appearance, which must be exhibited to the customs officers at ports of entry or departure; a special cordon of officers to guard the frontier of British Columbia, in order to prevent the unlawful immigration of Chinese from that country; every constable, justice, policeman, sheriff and deputy sheriff along the border to have the power and authority of a United States marshal to make arrests for violation of the restriction law; the appelation of "merchants" under which so many Chinese had recently entered the United States, to be clearly defined and held applicable not to peddlers, hucksters, etc., but only persons actually engaged in business as the word is popularly understood. The bill passed—yeas 184, nays 13. The negative vote was cast by Adams (Ill.), Brewer (N. Y.), Browne (Ind.), Everhart, Henderson (Ill.), Hitt, Kean, Lyman, Price, Rice, Skinner (N. Y.), Smalls and Spooner, all Republicans.

Senator Van Wyck of Nebraska introduced in the senate a bill to restrict foreigners and foreign corporations in the ownership of public lands and any lands in the territories. The full text is:

Be it enacted etc., that it shall be unlawful for any persons or any associations not citizens of the United States, or for any corporation or company organized under authority of any foreign state, prince or potentate to acquire title from the United States to a greater quantity of public lands than individuals of the United States are authorized to enter under the settlement and improvement laws thereof, or to acquire, receive or hold by deed, grant or trust deed, hereafter executed greater quantities of land in the territories than 640 acres.

This bill is intended to protect American stockraisers and farmers from the invasion of large English corporations which have acquired thousand of acres of land in the western territories for these purposes. Senator Plumb of Kansas also introduced a bill still more strongent on the same subject.

The house decided, on Monday, by a vote of 142 to 93, to consider the contested election case of O'Farrel (Democrat) against Paul (Readjuster), of Virginia. The minority were not allowed time to prepare a report. J. S. Wise a Readjuster member from Virginia, fiercely denounced this action of the Democrats. The minority resolution declaring O'Farrell not entitled to a seat was lost—81 to 140. This was a strict party vote, except that Cook, Democrat, of Iowa, voted with the Republicans in the affirmative. The majority resolution declaring O'Farrell entitled to the seat was then adopted and O'Farrell took the oath.

In the Senate, Wednesday, a bill was introduced by Mr Edmunds to place Gen. U. S. Grant on the retired list of the army. Mr. Hill made a speech in favor of the bill to declare forfeited the lands granted the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railway company. The discussion of the shipping bill was resumed, and a substitute for one section was submitted by Mr. Vest, and accepted by Mr. Frye, author of the bill, abolishing all tonnage dues on United States vessels on entering United States ports only retaining such dues on vessels of foreign countries discriminating in like manner against the United States.

In the house the bill for the relief of Fitz John Porter came up with senate amendments. Mr. Slocum moved to non-concur in the senate amendments. Mr. Bain moved concurrence. Mr. Keifer opposed the bill, declaring it unconstitutional. Mr. Slocum said he was glad the gentleman from Ohio had attacked Fitz John Porter. The gentlemen would be glad of it, because he would regard what the gentlemen said against him as a compliment, and it would be so regarded by the country. He (Slocum) had only been surprised that the gentleman from Ohio had not summoned Charles Garfield and Elder to sustain his course as he had done a few days ago. [Applause on the Democratic side and hisses on the Republican side.] Mr. Belford said he would take Grant's words as to the injustice to Gen. Porter rather than the words of Mr. Keifer or any other party on the floor. The motion to refer the bill to the committee of the whole was lost, and the senate amendments nonconcurred in.

The iron-clad oath which was provided for at the outbreak of the war and has never been repealed, although numerous attempts have been made to strike it from the statue books, has at last been abolished. The house on Wednesday, concurred on the bill which passed the senate some time ago for the purpose, and it only needs the signature of the president to become a law. This oath has always been administered in congress, and in courts to persons who did not take part in the rebellion, while those who did have taken what is known as the modified oath.

Senator Van Wyck offered a resolution, which, at the suggestion of Conger, was laid over one day, directing the secretary of the interior to withhold the granting of patents to or recognizing any claim made by the Northern Pacific railroad adjoining and on account of what is known as the Puyallup branch, built many years ago, until this congress shall take action on the question of the forfeiture of lands granted said road. A resolution was adopted calling on the secretary of the interior for information regarding the cowboy who shot at Black Wolf's hat on Lame Deer creek, Mont. This refers to the recent ranch burning by Black Wolf's band.

In the house, Thursday. On motion of Mr. Ellis all prior bills were set aside, and the committee proceeded to the consideration of the bill appropriating $1,000,000 for the celebration of the world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition at New Orleans. Mr. Ellis briefly explained the provisions of the bill and pointed out the safeguards which had been established for the return of the appropriation to the United States out of the receipts. After further debate, on motion of Mr. Hiscock an amendment was adopted providing that the sum appropriated shall only be paid on the treasurer of the United States being satisfied that $500,000 has been contributed by the World's Industrial and Cotton exposition. The bill passed—yeas 134, nays 87.

Among the bills reached on the speaker's table the 7th inst., was the senate bill to authorize the secretary of the interior to ascertain the amount due citizens of the United States for supplies furnished the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof. The bill was referred to the committee of the whole on the state of the Union. As it is among the last bills on this calendar its chance for passage is exceedingly small.

The subcommittee of the house on Indian affairs, having in charge the senate bill to open the Sioux reservation, have with some amendments agreed to the bill, and will report it to the full committee this week. The most important amendment is with regard to the term of the treaty with the Indians. That portion of the bill which provides for the conveyance of a reservation in fee to the tribe occupying it, the subcommittee recommend shall be stricken out. Inasmuch as the bill provides that the lands may be allotted in severalty to the Indians, and that at the end of twenty-five years patents shall be issued to the several allottees, they do not favor patenting any land to different tribes. The other amendments proposed by the committee are unimportant, and with the exception named, the bill will be reported practically as it came from the senate.

The bill granting additional pension to the widow of Gen. Francis P. Blair passed the house. It grants her $5,000 for her husband's services in organing troops and increasing her pension to $50 a month.

Failure of the Northwestern Car Company.

Some excitement was caused last Saturday by the announcement of the failure of the Northwestern Car and Manufacturing company at Stillwater, Minn., of which Senator D. M. Sabin is president, and the appointment of E. S. Brown, of the firm of Hersey, Bean & Brown, of Stillwater, as receiver.

The failure is ascribed to losses by fire, dull times, the non-payment of notes for machinery, and the failure of loan negotiations in New York consequent upon the great Marine bank failure. The assets are reported at four millions to cover immediate liabilities of a million and a quarter. A note of $5,000 went to protest Friday night, and on Saturday the executive committee decided that it would be best for all parties to throw the whole concern into the hands of a receiver.

In the city of New York alone it is estimated that there are at present no fewer than four hundred millionaires, thirty of whom own from $5,000,000 to $50,000,000 apiece, while there are about ten who possess from $50,000,000 to $150,000,000 each, Mr. William H. Vanderbilt standing at the head of the whole list with the magnificent accumulation of $200,000,000. "Rich beyond the dreams of avarice" is no longer a mere rhetorical flourish.

He was the only witness to the shooting of Foster by Donaldson, in May, 1882, and in the examination before the coroner, being a stranger, he was required to give bonds for his appearance as a witness. Unable to do so, he was imprisoned from June 5 to Aug. 12, when he was released by habeas corpus.

For some time the question has been mooted as to whether the division office of the Bradstreet company in Milwaukee should continue to cover and report upon business in Western Wisconsin or whether that territory should be transferred to the jurisdiction of the St. Paul office. The central office, in New York, having considered the matter, examined statistics and received reports, has decided to make the transfer to the St. Paul office, for the announced reason that St. Paul is the reorganized trade center of Western Wisconsin.

The report of the United States statistical agent for Minnesota estimates the increase in wheat acreage in in the state for 1884 at 3¼ per cent., or about 95,000 acres. This, with an average yield equal to that of last season, would add about 1,400,000 bushels to the total wheat production of the state. In some localities, however, the grain is said to have wintered badly. This is particularly the case in unwooded prairie sections. To what extent this is true, however, is not stated.

The United States Agricultural department's statistical agent for Minnesota, in his report for May 1 states that wheat planting is virtually finished in this state for the season, some tracts of low lands which the rains of ten days ago made too wet for planting, being all that remained to plant. The aggregate area planted will exceed that of last year by about 3¼ per cent., or some 95,000 acres, and for the most part the seed has been put into the ground under favorable circumstances. Much of the grain is up and growing finely. The number of acres to be put in oats, rye, barley, and flax will exceed those planted in these grains last year very considerably; but the area planted in corn will necessarily be largely reduced owing to the difficulty experienced in obtaining seed that can be depended upon.

The total number of immigrants and settlers passing through St. Paul during the week ending the 3d. inst., was about two thousand seven hundred. Of this number the Manitoba took out about one thousand five hundred, 1,000 of whom were destined for points north of Barnesville. The Northern Pacific took out about one thousand, nearly all of whom were ticketed to points on the extreme western division. The remaining two hundred were taken out by the Duluth, Omaha and Milwaukee & St. Paul.

The forthcoming annual report of State Insurance Inspector McGill, a summary of which is printed elsewhere, is full of interesting facts, figures and suggestions. Only A Line.

Young beginners in wrong-doing never look at the end—as they might a thousand times in the example of others' ruin whose first step downward was the very one they are taking. The despair which inevitably closes the unchecked career of those who throw their talents and the promise of their youth away, has seldom been more affectingly presented than we find it in the following little life-sketch:

Less than three months ago a wreck of a man staggered into the office of a weekly-paper in eastern Michigan and asked for money to buy whiskey. Strangely enough the publisher was an old school-mate. They were apprentices in the same town. They worked side by side as finished compositors. One had sobriety and thrift—the other had a good heart and an open hand. Twenty years made the one rich and influential—the other a drunkard who often slept in the gutter. The one had made use of what God had given him, but the other had deliberately made himself a wreck.

The meeting called up a host of recollections, and the contrast between their situations was so great that the old drunkard was sobered as he realized it. He was offered work, but he had become too broken. The stick and the rule were no longer for him. He was offered a temporary home, but he looked at his rags and felt his shame for the first time in months. When money was handed him he waved it back and said,—

"I shall not want it. I ask in the name of olden days and as a fellow craftsman, one little favor."

"It shall be granted."

"When you know that I am dead then turn a rule for me and give me a single line."

The promise was made and the old wreck floated out again on the current of life, borne here and there, and feeling that death was to be the end. Yesterday a copy of the weekly reached the Free Press with proof that the editor had fulfilled his promise. He had turned a rule for the poor wreck, and had given him a line:

"Died, September 27, 1882, George White."

That was all, but in that line was such a sermon as no man on earth could deliver. For every word there was a year of woe and degradation. For every letter there were tears and heartaches and promises and failures.—Detroit Free Press.

New Story of Garfield.

A gentleman who knew Garfield well tells a story which has never before been published of that remarkable man. "We were sitting," said this gentleman, "in the office of the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Thompson of Indiana, waiting to be heard on some matter of routine business, when Garfield took his seat at a vacant desk near by and commenced writing with both hands upon scratch pads on either side of him. He seemed to write with one hand as freely as with the other. Both hands, in fact, appeared to move automatically. The only difference was that the lines on the tablet written with the left hand, were reversed from the usual order. The consequence was that the writing on the left hand tablet could not be read except by an expert, or by holding up to a light or before a mirror. I looked at the one written with the left hand on its upper side, and while the lines seemed remarkably uniform they conveyed no meaning, but holding the thin paper up at the light I saw not only that the words written were the same as those on the tablet written with the right hand. but that every peculiarity in the formation of a letter which was found on the tablet was exactly reproduced on the left hand. The achievement was a marvel to me, as I had never heard of it before, although I have since heard that many people do it. Garfield said that he often wrote that way, whenever he wished to preserve an exact copy of what he was writing without having a copy made by letter press, and that in this manner he saved a great deal of time without any more appreciable fatigue. I asked him how he got into that habit. He said that while teaching school once he had occasion to use his right hand to point out something and that unconsciously he kept on writing upon the black-board with his left. Upon turning to the black-board to look at what he had written, he observed that the writing was reversed, but that he had full use of his left hand for writing, and from that time he made use of both hands. He was, in fact, completely ambi-dextrous."

The Wise Mother-in-Law

From the Burlington Hawkeye.

She meeteth her son-in-law at the door when the new clock tolleth fourteen, and he essayeth to let himself into the hall by unlocking the front gate with his watch key. And for this oftimes he feareth her.

She knoweth his ways and his tricks are not new to her. She is up to all his excuses, and when he sayeth he was detained down at the bank until the next morning;

Or, that the last car had gone, and he had to walk;

Or, that he was sitting up with a sick friend;

Or, that he was looking for his collar button;

Or, that he was drawn on the jury;

Or, that he had joined the astronomy class;

Or, that his books wouldn't balance;

Then doth she get onto him with both feet, for she sayeth within herself: "All these things hath his father-in-law said unto me, for lo, these many years. Lo, this is also vanity and vexation of spirit."

And for this he feareth her yet more and more.

The Faro Passion.

Speaking of faro and other wicked games, a Virginian, after remarking that in the better days of the republic when everybody played faro, a gentleman was distinguished by the comment "He plays with red checks" from the poor white-chip trash, dwelt upon the passionate love for the game which possesses men who get into its clutches. "Years ago," he said, "two of the finest lawyers in New Orleans on their way to New York stopped at Charlottesville, Va., because they heard there was a man there who dealt faro. They found the man and played all night. About midnight one lawyer whispered to the other: 'He's cheating.' 'Hush!' said the other; 'I've known that for two hours; but there isn't another faro game within fifty miles.'"—Philadelphia Record.

The selection of Mr. Kindred as an elector does not give general satisfaction to the Republican party in the Fifth District. If the Fifth District was to be honored by having an elector appointed, the party should have been consulted and allowed a voice in naming the man. There are a plenty of good republicans—men who have always stood up for the party through thick and thin, whom the party would have delighted to honor, but when the appointment is made a matter of barter and sale it very naturally is not satisfactory. No one will pretend that it was not a sharp trick but whether the end will justify the means is a matter of serious doubt. The Republican party of the District, at Moorhead repudiated the bolters and gave them a deserved rebuke but it would seem that there is one or more (would be) leaders who think they know more about what the party needs than the party itself does and to these mar-plots belong the honor (?) of undoing all the good work of years. Let these men beware and go a trifle slower in the future.

THE "PRAIRIE FARMER" BOOMING

The Old Friends of The Prairie Farmer, and many farmers all over the West, and East, too, will be glad to learn of the good fortune that has come to this time-honored Journal, which for nearly half a century (43 years) has been doing good service to and for the agricultural interests of our country. The number of May 3d announces that, henceforth, The Prairie Farmer will be under the Editorial Direction and Business Management of Mr. Orange Judd, who, after more than a quarter century of service at the head of the American Agriculturist, has left his former field to other hands, and removed to near Chicago, a thousand miles nearer to hundreds of thousands of his older enterprising readers who have preceded him to the West. The number before us gives evidence of the vigor and experience he brings to his new field of work. All who want specimens of the papers as it is, and is to be, and to enjoy its advantages, can have The Prairie Farmer, weekly, from May 1st, up to 1885, by sending a single dollar to Prairie Farmer Publishing Company 150 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

The Northwest home, a monthly periodical, published at Grand Forks, by W. R. Bierly, is on our table. It is a large and attractive pamphlet devoted to booming North Dakota and answers well the purpose. It is publish for $1 per year or 25 cents per quarter. Address the publisher at Grand Forks D. T., for a sample copy.

The Kindred papers are already beginning to craw-fish on the arrangements made at the State Convention, whereby Mr. Kindred was made elector in the interest of "peace and harmony" (?) and the Kindred delegates to Chicago were to withdraw. The Brainerd Tribune and other papers now claim that "the Kindred party are not bound by the action or agreement of their leader," and plainly intimate that those delegates will go to Chicago all the same—in fact will now stand a greater show of admission than before. That compromise was a very unwise one and whoever is responsible for it will appreciate that fact erelong, because the Kindred element, or at least those who control it will never be satisfied until they absolutely control the Republican party and they care not by what means that control is obtained. By fair means or foul they are determined to win as the attitude of their organs now plainly indicates. They know that they have got not the ghost of a show to win by a fair fight—that was plainly shown them at Moorhead, and they know that only by trickery can they have a chance and it seems they are none too good to try it.

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW;

Collection and Land Office Business made a specialty. Money secured for final proofs on short notice.

CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.

The selection of Mr. Kindred as an elector does not give general satisfaction to the Republican party in the Fifth District. If the Fifth District was to be honored by having an elector appointed, the party should have been consulted and allowed a voice in naming the man. There are a plenty of good republicans—men who have always stood up for the party through thick and thin, whom the party would have delighted to honor, but when the appointment is made a matter of barter and sale it very naturally is not satisfactory. No one will pretend that it was not a sharp trick but whether the end will justify the means is a matter of serious doubt. The Republican party of the District, at Moorhead repudiated the bolters and gave them a deserved rebuke but it would seem that there is one or more (would be) leaders who think they know more about what the party needs than the party itself does and to these mar-plots belong the honor (?) of undoing all the good work of years. Let these men beware and go a trifle slower in the future.

THE "PRAIRIE FARMER" BOOMING

The Old Friends of The Prairie Farmer, and many farmers all over the West, and East, too, will be glad to learn of the good fortune that has come to this time-honored Journal, which for nearly half a century (43 years) has been doing good service to and for the agricultural interests of our country. The number of May 3d announces that, henceforth, The Prairie Farmer will be under the Editorial Direction and Business Management of Mr. Orange Judd, who, after more than a quarter century of service at the head of the American Agriculturist, has left his former field to other hands, and removed to near Chicago, a thousand miles nearer to hundreds of thousands of his older enterprising readers who have preceded him to the West. The number before us gives evidence of the vigor and experience he brings to his new field of work. All who want specimens of the papers as it is, and is to be, and to enjoy its advantages, can have The Prairie Farmer, weekly, from May 1st, up to 1885, by sending a single dollar to Prairie Farmer Publishing Company 150 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

The Northwest home, a monthly periodical, published at Grand Forks, by W. R. Bierly, is on our table. It is a large and attractive pamphlet devoted to booming North Dakota and answers well the purpose. It is publish for $1 per year or 25 cents per quarter. Address the publisher at Grand Forks D. T., for a sample copy.

The Kindred papers are already beginning to craw-fish on the arrangements made at the State Convention, whereby Mr. Kindred was made elector in the interest of "peace and harmony" (?) and the Kindred delegates to Chicago were to withdraw. The Brainerd Tribune and other papers now claim that "the Kindred party are not bound by the action or agreement of their leader," and plainly intimate that those delegates will go to Chicago all the same—in fact will now stand a greater show of admission than before. That compromise was a very unwise one and whoever is responsible for it will appreciate that fact erelong, because the Kindred element, or at least those who control it will never be satisfied until they absolutely control the Republican party and they care not by what means that control is obtained. By fair means or foul they are determined to win as the attitude of their organs now plainly indicates. They know that they have got not the ghost of a show to win by a fair fight—that was plainly shown them at Moorhead, and they know that only by trickery can they have a chance and it seems they are none too good to try it.

The passenger train arrives here at 10:10 a. m., as you will notice by the regulator at Berthiaume Bros.

McKinnon Bros. sold two top carriages on Monday. They sold $700 worth of vehicles to the same firm on the same day.

Wm. Jantz, who has tended bar for August Wentzel for so long, left early this week for Duluth, where he will remain awhile.

Bro. Holmes, of the Red Lake Falls Gazette, made us a very pleasant call on Saturday last. He reports things on the boom at the Falls.

M. W. Jensen was in on Friday. He reports seeding in the Sand Hill country nearly completed and farmers all flourishing and happy.

Mr. Knight who was landlord of the Central House for several months past, will leave for Duluth soon where he goes to look after his interests in that city.

As we briefly noticed last week, Mr. S. P. Norton has taken possession of the Central house. Mr. Norton is a landlord of experience and will doubtless do well at his new stand.

Fortier has procured some new curtains for his windows and has put in handsome coverings making very fine display windows. You can find all kinds of fancy summer drinks at Fortier's place.

We have had the earliest spring on record, and we think we are indebted to the New Era Grader for at least a portion of it. Wherever it has done its work [illegible] will find that farmers are ten [illegible] of last year, at least.

Wheat is nearly all in and doing well and the grangers begin to anticipate big crops. The spring has been unusually auspicious for seeding and farmers have improved it to the uttermost. It is at least ten days earlier than last year. No "frozen wheat" [illegible] year [illegible]

[illegible] Watts of this city received the [illegible] in Canada for the best time in [illegible] mile walk. Mr. Watts walked the ten miles without any practice in 1 hour and 46 minutes, which is good time, and with training he would [illegible] doubt be one of the best in the country.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication April 24th, 1884.]

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN the conditions of a certain mortgage, executed and delivered by Timothy O. Sullivan, a single man, mortgagor, to T. L. Smedes, mortgagee, dated the twenty-seventh day of March in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, and recorded as a mortgage, together with the power of sale therein contained, in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the twenty-seventh day of March A. D. 1882, at 4:15 o'clock p. m., in book "Y" of mortgages, on pages 276, 277 and 278, which said mortgage authorized the holder thereof, in case of said default, to declare due and foreclose the same for the whole amount secured to be paid thereby, and whereas, there is claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice the amount of seven hundred and twenty-eight and 23-100 dollars, being the whole amount secured to be paid thereby, and still unpaid, and twenty-seven and 10-100 dollars taxes paid by mortgagee, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, and whereas, by such default the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative,

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of such power of sale contained in, and recorded with said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, at public auction, by the Sheriff of said County, or by his deputy of the County, on Tuesday the 10th day of June A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-four, at 10 a. m., to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs, taxes and expenses of sale, and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

The premises described in said mortgage, and so to be sold, are the lot, piece or parcel of land situated in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The northeast quarter (ne¼) of Section number thirty-four (34,) in Township number one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range number forty-nine (49) west, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, according to the government survey thereof.

A correspondent of the Pioneer Press contributes the following items of interest concerning our city and her prospects.

I drove thirty miles this week over a part of the valley near Crookston, where more attention has been paid than elsewhere in the past eighteen months to ditching. The work was done in roadbuilding, the result being two-fold—a good roadway, so that grain can be hauled any time in the year, and adjoining land finds an outlet for excessive rainfall. In one place I noted that Mr. E. S. Corser of Minneapolis, whose farm is one of the best for wheat and stock in the region, had defied the old belief that water runs down hill, and had drained a part of his farm by excavating a ditch half a mile long, from six to ten feet deep, with no outlet. The water collecting there leaves adjacent acres dry, and the sun soon evaporates the contents of the reservoir. If this principle of drainage can be successfully applied in other places it will redeem thousands of acres supposed to be worthless. The net result of the ditching done around Crookston, I should say, was a month's gain in early seeding this spring. Wheat stands between two and three inches high there.

T. B. Walker, who has built a large mill and plans to put up two more like it at Crookston, is straining every dollar to get his large stumpage of pine cut and in the market before the Nelson bill opens the reservation. Walker proposes to let no honest penny escape. He has made thirty dumping wood carts, and will sell mill wood from slabs and refuse to the farmers for ten miles around. A railroad, to connect with Gen. Haupt's Dakota Southern, will push in to Walker's mill from the Southwest and afford his principal outlet to the bare farming country where pine is always at a premium. Already prices of lumber are from 10 to 20 per cent lower than before the Red Lake pine was expected on the market. Some further decline will come, with the market overstocked as it is in other sections.

In passing I may say that Crookston and Fergus Falls point a good moral on booms. These towns are bright and fresh with new growth in the midst of bountiful resources for farming and manufacturing. They have never pressed much claim to being railroad or trade centers, and yet are surely growing into such relations to the country circumjacent. Crookston looks to the Red Lake pine for great future prosperity, and probably will not be disappointed, though other towns and mills on the water powers up stream will share the good fortune.

D. C. Coe, one of our popular traveling men who sells sash, doors, mouldings, etc., went fishing last Saturday evening. Coe is a good fisherman and everybody knows it, and one of our merchants in this city offered to contract for all the fish that our friend Coe might catch. Coe finally promised to furnish fish for five cents a pound, and he then started for the river in company with two or three other unfortunate traveling men, but luck seemed to be against him, he got plenty of bites—mosquitoe bites, but caught no fish. They finally returned to the hotel and assembled in the office and finally the boys noticed that Topping began to grow very uneasy and was looking all around the office, at last he approached Coe, slipped his hand in his coat pocket and brought out three or four skip-jacks that had been caught about a week before and which Coe was going to take to the aforesaid merchant; the result was that Coe had to take the first train, as he had urgent business elsewhere. This is the reason that Coe made such a short stay in our city.

Swanson & Keoppe have purchased A. Allen's Brick yard. They started up last Monday and are now running in full blast. It is well known that the finest kind of bricks are manufactured at that yard and at the rate that they are turning out the brick it will not be long until they will have a kiln up. There will be a great amount of brick used here this season and this firm are starting in for the purpose of supplying the demand as far as possible.

Two of the boys in our city took a ride last Monday evening with a couple of Ed. Schrader's flyers. Everything went along nicely for some time, and they drove around thinking and wondering at the magnitude and growth of our city and finally turned down Broadway and started for Carman. On nearing the bridge the horses were frightened and became unmanagable and when they got to the approach of the bridge they turned so suddenly that the carriage was turned bottom side up and they were thrown violently to the ground. They were very badly bruised but luckily not seriously hurt. The team kept right along across the bridge with the carriage bottom side up until they reached the other side and then a bolt broke and they were loosened from the carriage and they then kept on toward Carman. HI HENRY'S MINSTRELS.

Speaking of this excellent troupe which will appear in Ericsson's Hall, in this city on Tuesday evening, June 27th, the Fargo Republican says:

"A crowded house greeted this superb organization last evening, and were repaid by witnessing one of the finest performances of refined minstrelsy ever seen in Fargo. The entertainment was thoroughly enjoyable from beginning to end, and every performer a perfect artist in his line. The singing was tuneful and well selected, and the jokes, most of them new—a remarkable achievement in the burnt-cork line, were very good and provoked incessant laughter."

BETTER THAN NO. 1 HARD.

On Monday Peter Cornelius brought a two-year old Clydesdale colt to the city to be weighed. The colt weighed 1210 lbs, and it would take a handsome $200 bill to get it from Peter Who assures us that stock-raising is far more profitable than raising wheat.

Speaking of Hi Henry's Minstrel troupe the Pana, Ill., Palladium says:

"The largest audience that has been attracted to any show for many seasons, assembled at Hayward's Opera House last Wednesday evening to witness the performance of Hi Henry's Minstrels. From the time the curtain raised until it dropped on the last act, the audience was in one tumultuous roar of laughter and applause. No troupe has ever given such universal satisfaction. We would be pleased to give each artist a deserved mention but space will not admit; suffice us to say that they are all stars that cannot be eclipsed. A full house awaits them on their return."

MONUMENTAL MINSTRELS.

Grand Forks Herald.

The Hi Henry troup was so liberally praised before its appearance in this city that many were incredulous, but the large audience which witnessed the performance on Saturday night will uniformly bear testimony to the excellence of this combination, deserving as it does the distinction of being called Monumental Minstrels, inasmuch as they invariably perform what they advertise. The want of space alone prevents mention of the various specialties, for they were all excellent. Hi Henry himself has lost none of his old time fervor as a cornet player and when called out, neatly acknowledged the compliment. The audience was largely composed of the elite of both sexes and the performance throughout was of such a refined tone that none could take offence.

PLUCK.

A ROMANCE OF THE SEA.

BOSTON, MASS., April 13.—The ship Mercury from Port Townsend, reports that she passed Pitcairn Island on January 11. Inhabitants came aboard and reported 105 persons on the Island—52 males and 53 females. She took their mail, some twenty-five letters, for different parts of the world.

At long intervals an item like the above recalls to the minds of a few of the older generation of readers a far more interesting romance of the sea than "Robinson Crusoe," and one which has—what De Foe's immortal story has not—the essential element of truth. Though Byron has utilized the principal incidents in his poem "The Island," yet they are comparatively unfamiliar to the public of to-day and may be worth brief revival.

Pitcairn Island is located near the southeastern corner of the great Polynesian Archipelago, in the Pacific Ocean, in latitude 25 degrees, 3 minutes, 6 seconds south, and longitude 130 degrees, 6 minutes west. It is entirely alone in that wide waste of waters, the nearest main land being the coast of Chili, more than 2,000 miles away. Its length is about two and a half miles, its breath half as much, and the total area about one and a half square miles. Surrounded by rocks and reefs, with no harbor for larger craft than boats, and a soil not specially productive, it would hardly be mentioned even in geographies but for the strange history of which it is the center and scene. It was first discovered by Carteret in 1767, and named for the officer who first saw it from the masthead, afterwards Maj. Pitcairn, who led the British marines at the battle of Bunker Hill and was killed there. In December, 1787, the government sent the ship "Bounty," under command of Capt. William Bligh, to Tahiti for the purpose of collecting bread fruit plants which were to be introduced into the West India colonies. On the voyage from Tahita to Jamaica a long-slumbering mutiny broke out, due in a large measure to the unbearable tyranny of Bligh, who, as the sailors say, had "a genius for making a hell afloat." The leader was the ranking midshipman and acting first lieutenant, Fletcher Christian, a young man of good family, who seems to have suffered until forbearance ceased to be a virtue. Bligh and eighteen men who choose to accompany him were sent adrift in an open boat, and managed to make their way in safety to Timor, an inhabited island 3,000 miles distant. The "Bounty," in charge of Christian, went back to Tahiti, where sixteen of the crew preferred to remain. The rest, nine sailors, with six Tahitian men and twelve women, after cruising about for some time, landed on Pitcairn Island, where the ship was broken up and burned and a permanent settlement made. As soon as possible after Bligh's arrival in England the government dispatched the "Pandora" sloop of war in search of the mutineers. Of the sixteen who had remained at Tahiti, fourteen were captured, of whom three were executed in September, 1792; but no trace could be obtained of their companions, and the search was finally abandoned. Not until 1808 were they heard from by the outside world. In that year Capt. Folger, an American, touched at what he supposed a desert island, and found a happy and prosperous little colony—all of whom spoke English—under the leadership of the last survivor of the original settlers, Alexander Smith, who had changed his name to John Adams. He was very uncommunicative in regard to the past, but admitted that the mutineers and the Tahitians had quarreled among themselves and killed each other; Christian having been murdered in his own house, which he had built on a lofty peak, where he could sweep with his glass the ocean, which, sooner or later, he feared, would bring the ministers of vengeance. Adams had been converted from evil ways by means of a prayer-book and on these he laid the foundations of the reform that produced a Christian community in which crime was utterly unknown and perfect peace and harmony prevailed. Folger, on his return, reported what he had seen to the British Government, which was then too busy with the Napoleonic wars to give the matter any attention. In 1814, however, a British vessel called at the island, found old Adams still alive and the controlling spirit of a devoted band of disciples. Since then the colony has been, to a certain extent, under the patronage and protection of England. In 1831, the population having outgrown the means of subsistence, eighty-seven persons were transported to Tahiti; but disliking their new home they returned to the old one within six months. In 1855, the number having again become too large, all were removed at their own request to Norfolk Island; but in 1856, two families, embracing seventeen persons, went back to Pitcairn; and from these, with some small re-enforcements, the present population of fifty-two males and fifty-three females has risen. They have their own code of laws, as primitive almost as those in the Garden of Eden, and complete isolation from the world's vices and the most of its miseries. Lady Belcher has written a very interesting book on "the Mutineers of the Bounty," and, singularly enough, an American edition of this book, given by a St. Louis gentleman to a sea captian in the Australian trade, gave to the descendants of Christian and his companions on Norfolk Island the first intelligence that their history had been fully published by a competent hand.

The Sweet Singer of the Sierras.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

The newspapers are making great ado about the log cabin of Joaquin Miller. The fact that the "Child of the Sierras" prefers to live in a cabin made of logs, with common clay pasted in the cracks, rather than in a seven story flat, has interested several million people. The poet is a deceptive man. One who reads his writings and hears the gossip about him would expect to meet a primeval child of the forest wandering around the city, clad in bear-skins and reticence. They would find Mr. Miller a civilized man. When he came to New York, a few years ago, it is true that he appeared in a blue shirt with long, yellow hair flowing around his shoulders and a straggling beard dropping to his waist. He was somewhat erratic then. I remember once, in a sudden freak he engaged a negro valet who bore a striking resemblance to the pugilist known as the "Black Diamond." This feller followed Mr. Miller around like the ghost of a blackened past. It is said that Mr. Miller employed the powerful negro to hold his victims while he read poetry to them. This rumor was never substantiated, however. Mr. Miller now wears his hair of reasonable length. He has poetic cast of features, and wears the mustache and imperial of a Prussian grenadier—if there are any Prussian grenadiers. He is good natured and clever, and never talks poetry unless he has been dining late. To hear him converse at his best, one should casually remark that McKee Rankin, who stole one of his plays, is a gentleman. The poet of the Sierras will rise then and deliver himself for a few sentiments that will blow the gas out and make the china dance on the table.

The Art of Story-Telling.

Some people seem personally fitted for effective story-telling. George Henry Lewes was one such. Those who were familiar with him have often remarked the vivacious sparkle of the eye, the peculiarly telling action of the hands, and the self-possession with which he would fascinate a convivial party. Anthony Trollope it was, if we are not mistaken, who once said that the very clothes he wore seemed somehow to contribute to the effect of his good stories—his velvet coat, and his neat slippers, and the rest of it, all worn with that air of easy unconsciousness well calculated to enhance the points of his narrative. That unconsciousness, by the way, is a great matter in personal narrative. There are some who are prevented from ever telling a story well by their anxiety to do so. They appear to be as much concerned for themselves as for the success of their tale. Their own manner and choice of language and the impression they are making on their auditors, are plainly distracting their wits and diverting a great part of their power. A good story-teller will always be found to be one who is himself too deep in his own enjoyment and appreciation of his tale to be at all conscious of anything pertaining to himself. He enters into the thing too fully and too entirely to be concerned with the criticisms which may be passing upon his personal appearance, or language or manner. Anything like timidity or nervousness, or self-consciousness is fatal to that freedom of manner which is always a principal charm of really successful tale-tellers, and in all such narratives as observant travelers have to tell upon their return home. A ready flow of language is, of course, essential to success in this line. Nothing is more unpleasant than to have to listen to long narratives which seem continually on the point of breaking down for want of words, or which are told in words that continually prompt the listener to interruption and criticism which politeness, nevertheless forbids. A pleasant voice, too, is a great point, though not by any means invariably indispensable. There are times as every one must have observed, when some harsh incongruity of voice adds immensely to the effects of a story just in the same way as the personal appearance of a narrator may greatly influence its success. Lewes was generally allowed to be anything but a handsome man, and it was in great measure what some would call—did call, in fact—his very ugliness which often lent immense force to his utterances. An odd or unpleasant vein may do precisely the same thing, giving, perhaps, a soupcon of acidity to what would otherwise be found flat and insipid, or a droll turn to points which would be tame and dull if told in a smooth and faultless tone.—London Globe.

The Author of "My Maryland."

Washington Letter to the Philadelphia Record.

James R. Randall, the gentle author of that fiery war song, "Maryland, My Maryland," is one of the most delightful men in Washington. You find it difficult to believe that this quiet, liberal, broad-minded man wrote that narrow, passionate appeal. He was very young, however. He is young still, but wiser and broader. He has come to that point where he is willing to admit that that disagreeable characterization, "Northern scum," in the last stanza was simply put in for sake of the rhyme. He would not write such a song now. Yet he copies the old song again and again in response to requests that come from the four corners of the earth. I saw a true copy of it yesterday. It is rarely printed correctly. It is generally mangled in quotation, and it is always mutilated in the newspapers. I hear that Mr. Randall contemplates gathering it and half a hundred other lyrics in a volume to be published shortly.

Great Success in the Taffy Line.

From the Somerville Journal.

He was late, and he was not altogether as he ought to have been. He saw by the light in the window that she was waiting for him, and he trembled, well knowing that he merited severe rebuke. As he entered the room she began:

"This is a nice time of——"

"My dear," he interrupted, "you can't tell what I was—hic—thinking of just now. Rather what you reminded me of as I came in. The lamp on the table and you sitting close to it. You and the lamp reminded me of the philosophy of which Matthew Arnold is the 'postle—you and the lamp—see!"

"No, I don't see. This is a nice——"

"Well—hic—I'll show you. Matthew Arnold is the 'postle of sweetness and light. The lamp is the light and you are the sweetness."

"You foolish fellow," said she with a smile, "what are you standing there for? Let me help you off with your coat."

Laughter as a Medicine.

A short time since two individuals were lying in one room very sick, one with brain fever and the other with an aggregated case of the mumps. They were so low that watchers were needed every night, and it was thought doubtful if the one sick of fever could recover. A gentleman was engaged to watch over night, his duty being to wake the nurse whenever it became necessary to administer medicine. In the course of the night both watcher and nurse fell asleep. The man with the mumps lay watching the clock, and saw that it was time to give the fever patient his potion. He was unable to speak aloud or to move any portion of his body except his arms but seizing a pillow, he managed to strike the watcher in the face with it. Thus suddenly awakened, the watcher sprang from his seat, falling to the floor, and awakened both the nurse and the fever patient. The incident struck the sick men as very ludicrous, and they laughed heartily at it for some fifteen or twenty minutes. When the doctor came in the morning he found his patients vastly improved, said he never knew so sudden turn for the better, and now both are up and well. Who says laughter is not the best of medicines? And this reminds the writer of another case. A gentleman was suffering from an ulceration of the throat, which at length became so swollen that his life was despaired of. His household came to his bedside to bid him farewell. Each individual shook hands with the dying man and then went away weeping. Last of all came a pet ape, and shaking the man's hand went away also with its hands over its eyes. It was so ludicrous a sight that the patient was forced to laugh, and laughed so heartily that the ulcer broke and his life was saved.—Sanitarian.

The Art of Riding.

From the New York Mail and Express.

A few evenings ago a reporter was passing by a well known riding academy, when he was arrested by the sound of music coming from within the enclosure. Entering he saw a large company of ladies and gentlemen riding through the figure of a quadrille to the music of a string band. The sight was novel and very striking, and while he lingered he engaged in conversation with the manager.

"The ring is occupied very nearly every night by private classes such as you now see," said he. "They are former pupils of the academy. They grow tired of the opera, theater, dinners, etc., but their equestrianism is never neglected."

"What style or how many styles of riding prevail here?"

"The style we like best is the park, though of course many desire to acquire the English cross country style. The park is the easiest and prettiest for smooth roads. With the park seat, the horseman rides with a long stirrup and from the ball of the foot. The cross country seat, on the other hand, makes the rider send the foot home in the stirrup, which must therefore be a short stirrup. He throws the legs forward and the body backward. It is much effected by the more competent horsemen. Fancy riding is also greatly indulged in. Leaping and jumping have come into favor too, and I think we shall soon have as many artists in the saddle in this country as in England."

"Do ladies learn to ride more easily than gentlemen?"

"They learn more readily and become more proficient. This is in consequence, I think, of the side-saddle used. A lady has a firm hold of her saddle not only with her leg, but she has the pommels for her hands if necessary. A gentleman has not. It is quite amusing sometimes to watch a beginner turn out his toes, drop his bridle and try to hang on with his heels. If you want to prove that man is the most awkward and ungraceful of all animals, put him on a moderately fiery horse."

"Is it not very difficult to teach a person to ride?"

"The art of riding must be acquired. The seat and style are all that have to be taught. We have English, French and German teachers. The novice is first given a quiet horse to ride. As he learns to sit on his animal the degree of the temper of the animal is increased until he finds himself astride a regular tearer. Of course the rider gets many a fall, and oftentimes he is thrown, but the fall is as nothing. You see the tan is soft, and he is up and at it again almost before he is down."

One Meal a Day.

From the Newcastle (Eng.) Chronicle.

Dr. George Fordyce, the anatomist and chemical lecturer, was accustomed to dine every day, for more than twenty years, at Dolly's chop-house, in Queen's Head Passage, Paternoster row. His researches in comparative anatomy had led him to conclude that man, through custom, eats oftener than nature requires, one meal a day being sufficient for that noble animal the lion. He made the experiment on himself at his favorite dining-house, and finding it successful he continued the following regimen for the above term of years: At 4 o'clock, his accustomed dinner hour, he entered Dolly's chop-house and took his seat at a table always reserved for him, on which were instantly placed a silver tankard full of strong ale, a bottle of port wine and a measure containing a quarter of a pint of brandy. The moment the waiter announced him the cook put a pound and a half of rump steak on the gridiron, and on the table some delicate trifle, as bonne bouche, to serve until steak was ready. This delicacy was sometimes half a broiled chicken, sometimes a plate of fish. When he had eaten this he took a glass of his brandy, and then proceeded to devour his steak. We say devour, for he always ate as rapidly as if eating for a wager. When he had finished his meat he took the remainder of his brandy, having during his dinner drank the tankard of ale and afterward drank the bottle of port. The doctor then adjourned to the Chapter coffee house in Paternoster row, and stayed while he sipped a glass of brandy and water. It was then his habit to take another at the London coffee house and a third at the Oxford, after which he returned to his house in Essex street, where he gave his lectures on chemistry. He made no other meal till his return next day at 4 o'clock at Dolly's.

A correspondent of the Norwich Bulletin writes: "Rev. S. W. Hanks, a native of Mansfield, Conn., and for many years District Secretary of the Seaman's Friend Society, Boston, so much resembles the lamented Abraham Lincoln that once during the war, while he was traveling through Vermont in the cars, word was sent in advance that Lincoln was on the train. At one station he was urged to step on the platform, the crowd was so eager to see their supposed President. But Mr. Hanks wisely declined the ovation, considering it too much a joke for a minister of the Gospel. The mother of Lincoln was a Hanks. Mr. Hanks, like 'Honest Old Abe,' possesses a genial temperament, jovial nature, and a true, honest Christian heart."

Alvin Jewett Johnson, the publisher, who was one of the most intimate friends and associates of the late Horace Greeley, died at his residence in New York recently, aged 57 years. At 16 he taught school, and soon after went south, where he earned his livelihood as a book canvasser. In 1857 he published "Johnson's Family Geography," with "Guysot's Physical Geography." After selling nearly 200,000 copies Mr. Johnson brought out "Facts for Farmers," which proved almost as successful. His "Johnson's Natural History" was also a profitable venture. The publication of "Dr. West's Analysis of the Bible" and "Dr. Johnson's Encyclopedia" were notable events of his life. Mr. Johnson leaves a large estate.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT'S POEM

We'll graft the lobster on the hop,
The oyster bed we'll gayly weed,
The cranberry jelly tree we'll flop,
And save the macaroni seed.

The beet root sugar we will get
By tapping of the hickory tree,
Horse chestnuts in the spring we'll set,
That in the autumn colts will be.

We'll prune the climbing sorghum vine,
We'll dig the ruta baga pear,
The clam shall with the pea entwine,
And both shall, mingling, blossom there.

The Berkshire goat its wool shall shed,
The Bantam sow shall feed on hay,
We'll milk the ducks, all thoroughbred,
That steal the eggs the squirrels lay.

A BIT OF GRASS.

BY SUSAN COOLIDGE.

It was a very small lawn indeed, so small as to make that fine title seem rather absurd, but cottages in the suburbs of cities must or should have "lawns." And small as it was, the same and the thing were dear to little Meta Sayres, its mistress. Her brief wifehood of three months had, as yet, brought no relaxation to the first fine arbor of matronhood, which counted housekeeping as a joy and perfection, the shining mark for duty to aim at. Everything inside the simple establishment was daintily appointed and most beautifully tended; everything outside would have been the same could Meta's busy fingers and energetic spirit have accomplished it, but fate and climate were against her.

For the sad thing about the "lawn" was that no grass grew on it. It had became Meta's chronic desire. St. Louis is a hot place as all the world knows, and that spring the heat had come earlier than usual. Meta and her husband had begun sewing grass seed early in March, when the frost was barely out of the ground. They had sown it again the last of March; and once more the last of April, and now, on the 10th of May, there was still no sign of promise, and the little enclosure lay as bare and naked as ever. The vines on the piazza were dense with unfolding leaves. The hedge was beginning to flower. The deutzias and weigelias and the single bed of pansies were full of blossoms, and only the rakemarks on the smooth earth showed any care had been bestowed on the grass plot, which lay hopeless and unlovely in the glare of the sun.

"Marion Ashurst says it's no use," Meta said, one day at dinner." Nobody can make grass seed grow here. She says it's too hot. It burns up directly it sprouts—if it ever does sprout. I told her ours hadn't sprouted at all, and she said that was just the way theirs did when they tried the experiment the first year they were here."

"Still people do have grass in St. Louis," remarked her husband. "Look at the park. The grass is splendid. And look at the private places. Many of them have excellent turf."

"Yes; Marian says we must sod our lawn—that's the only way."

"Isn't sodding rather expensive?" asked John, doubtfully.

"Yes, very expensive. I went to the gardener's this afternoon to ask about it, and he said it would cost thirty dollars! Just think—for one little yard! But it looks dreadfully as it is, and will be worse still in August, John?"

"That is very true. Grass is almost a necessity in a climate like this for people who stay on here for the whole summer, as we must do. If sodding is the only way to secure it, why we will just sod; and, as for the money, we'll economize in something else, hey, Meta?"

"Yes, you always say that, but I have observed that when it comes to the 'something else' your motives are rather vague, John dear!" replied Meta with a saucy smile. "However, all you say is true; I'll invent a way of saving money; you needn't worry about it dear."

John looked very likely to worry about that or anything else, as he sat comfortably in his arm chair, eating his strawberries, and looking across the pretty dinner table at his bonny wife. She was one of those fair, little, womanly women,

"Not too bright or good

who captivate the imaginations of men and hold their affections captive even more than regular beauties do. Her face and voice were full of sweetness, and they were the index of a sweet nature. Full of sun and cheer and bright fun, capable to her fingers' ends, only those who knew her best detected the deep power of affection of which she was capable, and the high and loyal devotion to what she believed to be right, which was the mainspring of her character. John Sayres had drawn a prize in his wife, how great a prize he only half comprehended as yet. It was reserved to him as to many another husband, gradually to realize and bless his good fortune during the long years of a long and happy life.

So at the dinner table that night it was voted, and carried nem. con., that the little yard should be at once turfed at an outlay of thirty dollars. Meta, in a rapid characteristic way, had decided in her own mind how the money could be spared at the expense of a little sacrifice to herself and none at all to her husband. The bare yard had been no small trial to her. Used to the verdure and shade of the large country place in which all the summer of her girlhood had been passed, her eyes hungered for a green outlook, and had missed it every day of the spring.

"How fortunate that those two big maples grow just outside our fence," she thought. "They will shade the grass all the afternoon, and John will water it with the hose every evening. I am sure we can make it grow. I'll order the sods early on Monday. There's no time to be lost now that we have decided to have them."

The next day was Sunday. As it chanced—if there be such a thing as a chance—a stranger officiated in the church to which our young couple had allied themselves. He was chaplain of a great Mississippi penitentiary, and had broken away from his work to beg help, not for his prisoners only, though their need was urgent, but for the freed negroes among whom he lived, and for whom he had established a school and a hospital. He told some moving stories, and he told them well, with a pathos of truth; and the force which a deep personal interest, so deep that it has swallowed up all self-interest, carries with it. The congregation experienced an answering throb of sympathy. With some it was a contagious, superficial emotion, to others the appeal stirred into life that deeper pity whose best relief is action. Among those were John and Meta.

The most generous givers are among those who have least to give. A look, a low-toned word or two settled the matter.

"We can do without the sods, John," whispered Meta, and he nodded assent with a deep, affectionate glance into her sweet earnest eyes. A Mackinnon pen—that aid to righteousness—was produced, a cheque hastily filled out, and a moment later the scrap of paper took its place in the plate beside bank notes and silver. Few people in the church had given quite so much, yet there were many who could better have afforded to give more. None beside had given at the cost of a distinct personal sacrifice; so true it is that will and wish can make possible what seems impossible where will and wish are lacking.

The young husband and wife walked home rather soberly, their minds full of what they had heard.

"It seems almost wrong to be so happy and well-off," thought Meta, as she glanced about the tiny paradise which represented so many things to her. Her eyes strayed through the window to the bare spot where now no grass would be. She surpressed a sigh. "I am not sorry," she said bravely to herself, "We have so much and those poor creatures have nothing. John's away so much of the day that he won't notice it very much, and I'll keep the white curtain down when I sit on this side of the room, and then I shall be about as well off as if the yard was green. Grass would have been very nice, but this is nicer." With a resolute smile she ran to dress the lettuce in the way which John prefered, to take her blanc mange from the ice and arrange a bowl of honeysuckle sprays for the middle of the table. The house seemed particularly attractive that day, dinner unusually good. Nothing enhances our own small blessings like coming into contact with the wants and needs of others, and out of our abundance sparing something with which to make up their lack of all.

Still it was not possible quite to forget or overlook the ugly bareness of the yard, and Meta must be forgiven one little sigh when Wednesday brought one plentiful rain and Saturday another. "How good this would have been for our sods," she thought, "they would have been sure to grow."

John was called to Cincinnati by business early in the following week, and Meta spent the days of his absence with her friend Mrs. Ashurst, who lived a little way in the country on the opposite side of the city. She had meant to get home some hours in advance of John to have all things in order to greet him, but missing the earlier train brought her into town late, so that their meeting after all was in the horse cars, and they alighted together at the corner above their house.

Reaching the gate they paused in amazement, with a sudden mutual exclamation. Behold, the yard was green! The long since planted and dispaired of seed had germinated. A thick fuzz of fine, slender points, each of which was an infantine blade of grass, covered the ground like a transparent mantle. Already the bareness was clothed upon. No one could call the "lawn" naked any longer. Scarcely able to believe her eyes, Meta looked and looked. then turning to her husband she cried: "It's a miracle, John! Such a thing was never known in this city before, I suppose. How did it happen?"

"It did not happen," replied John with a mysterious twinkle in his eyes.

"But how can you acount for it?"

"Angels"—in a low, solemn whisper. "They are so pleased with you for giving up your wish so cheerfully and never repenting it, and, in short, for being such a darling generally, that to reward your virtue they just took the matter in hand themselves, and it is they who have made the grass grow."

Meta blushed, and laughed and protested, and reminded John that he had given up the grass as well as she; but he adhered to his conclusion. People wondered exceedingly at the self-sown lawn, and it certainly flourished in a wonderful manner—perhaps because of the frequent "cuttings by moonlight" bestowed upon it by its owners, on the night douches with the hose. "It is a duty to co-operate with heaven," John answered. but all the same he held to his opinion, and when people said it was unaccountable, that grass never did so in St. Louis before, he always assumed an air of distant importance, as if in the confidence of some supernal power and entirely cognizant of the methods by which miracles are wrought. This diverted Meta exceedingly.

She would by no means give in to her husband's theory, though she delighted in her "lawn" and was very proud of its success; but he was firm in his opinion to the end, and there was more earnest than jest in his fancy that heaven in some special way was intent on rewarding his wife's goodness. And, for all Meta's laughter, he was perhaps not so far amiss. The Lord, who loveth the cheerful giver, sometimes rewards such, and he who knows all our secret wishes and has sympathy for them may not disdain to send his blessing even upon so small a thing as a bit of grass.

The Blue Grass Country Not Blue.

From the Sportsman.

The term Blue Grass Region of Kentucky is quite extensive, in its application but in its popular sense it applies only to the remarkable body of land in the center of the state which comprises six or eight counties surrounding Lexington. This favored district, which scientific authority has styled "the very heart of the United States," is underlaid by a decomposable limestone, which imparts to the soil an unsurpassed fertility, and gives to our grass, known to botanists as Poe Pretensis, a rich and permanent luxuriance which it attains nowhere else. Hence the term, "The Blue Grass Region," a synonym for the acme of fertility of a district which also bears the proud distinction of "the garden spot of the world." But why our grass is called "blue," when it never is blue, is one of the unsolved problems! It is always green except when in bloom, when the heads have a brownish-purple tint. If, however, the term "Blue Grass" is meant for an abbreviation of blue limestone grass, then it will do, for certainly it only reaches its highest perfection on our wonderful blue limestone soil. Propagated without cultivation, it comes up thick and juicy early in the spring, ripens in June, renews its growth in autumn, and, retaining its verdure in spite of snow and ice, furnishes abundant and unequaled pasage during the entire winter. It is believed to be indigenous.

NOTES FOR THE FARM AND HOUSE.

Home Miscellany.

SMOKE FROM ACCIDENTS.—When you have applied anything on the stove, or milk has boiled over, and a suffocating smoke escapes, filling the room and your breathing tubes sprinkle the spot with a quantity of salt, and it will cease almost immediately.

An old dress or cloak, of silk or any other material, if ripped and regularly washed in a few cents' worth of Spanish silk bark diluted with water will look like new again.

The following above violets we take from City and Country: "It may surprise not a few of our readers to hear that violets need culture. That culture affects all these is beyond a doubt. The size of the flower may be doubled or trebled by it. In some purchased too dearly by a diminution of fragrance. It is not so in violets, but the reverse. The larger they grow, the sweeter they are."

To get good results with flower seeds, I take any size low box, put in two or three inches good manure, and sift rich, light soil above, in which I sow the seeds, being careful not to cover too much. This acts just like a miniature hotbed, and is so easily made as to be within reach of anyone. The temperature near the bottom is about 90 degrees giving a temperature of about 75 degrees to the seeds, and enabling them to thrive in a cool room, providing sunlight is given. My seed of stocks, scabiosa, zinnia, etc., came up within four days of the seedings. Soil should be kept moist all the time.—C. A. M., Brier Hill, O.

TO DYE BLUE.—One quarter of a pound of copperas, two ounces of prussiate of potash, one ounce of vitrol, is sufficient to dye five pounds of goods. Dissolve the copperas and the prussiate of potash in seperate vessels in sufficient soft water to wet the goods. Put them in the copperas water and let them remain fifteen minutes, then heat the potash dye till it is lukewarm, put in the goods and let them stay fifteen minutes; take them out, add to the potash dye one ounce of vitrol; put in the goods again and for the deep shades boil them; for lighter shades take out before boiling.

Agricultural Items.

The first sale of imported Jersey cattle, imported in 1883 by Herr Harris and McFerran, took place at Louisville Tuesday. Fifty-six head were disposed of, bringing $19,390, averaging $344 apiece.

The editors of those agricultural journals who took stock in the recent false reports of foot-and-mouth disease in Kansas must feel ready to groan with vexation and shame when they see how they have encouraged the English papers to redouble their efforts to keep our cattle out of their market. Thus far their foolishness has greatly injured the very interests they were expected to protect.

William Hartly, of La Crosse, Wis., writes to the Breeders' Gazette that he has used a remedy for milk fever which ought not to remain a secret. It is one pint and a half of lard and one-half pint of kerosene, given in new milk, warm, repeating the dose every two or three hours. He is corroborated by Mr. T. C. Jones, another correspondent, and according to their experience, the remedy has never failed, though frequently resorted to in that section.

Indian Territory is a great place for twin colts. V. B. Hitchcock writes the New York Sun that Mr. Isaac Morris Baptist Mission, Cherokee Nation, owns twin colts which are three years old. Sam Sixkiller of Flint, Cherokee Nation, has a pair of, three-year-old mule twin colts. Charley Pritchett of Tahlequah, Cherokee Nation, raised a pair of twin pony colts and sold them to a man who went to the State of Kansas. Rev. W. A. Duncan, president of the board of education of the Cherokee Nation, Tahlequah, Cherokee Nation, has a pair of twin colts a few weeks old.

Flower Bed.

We suggest that you take the best spot you can get for a flower bed, rich and clean, and put in the roots and seeds of native plants. Many persons will be surpised to see how many of our neglected plants, which we call weeds, will thrive with room and cultivation. The common dandelion, the buttercup, the pink flowered yarrow and many others will make fine looking plants if given proper care, and all the care they want is room enough in a rich mellow soil. There are but few things in cultivation that make a more graceful plant for a hanging basket than yarrow, if the stalks are kept cut off so it will go to leaves. For this purpose, the clovers, both white and red, are very beautiful as well as fragrant. Golden rod under cultivation, will rival the old prince's feather with its mass of dense flowers.

Sun Baths.

A writer in the New York Tribune says. "In the spring of 1883 I was nervously prostrated from over-study, and then reduced to a mere skeleton by marasmus, which was checked in the early part of June. In the sun I found one of the grandest recuperating agents with which God has blessed man. Upon a broken-down system the sun has a quieting and soothing effect that nothing else can produce, and is nature's own life restoring agent. My manner of taking them was very simple. In the spring, when it is too cool to lie naked in the sun, go into the fresh air and sit in his rays. When warm enough make a bed on the floor, by the window and lie down naked in the sun from an hour and a half to two hours, or even longer, if desirable. Be not afraid of the heat. Do not take the bath immediately after eating. To lie upon comfortables on the hillside, dressed in light clothing, is a good way of taking a sun bath.

The Coming Woman.

If a woman must earn her own living there are many technical pursuits for which she may be qualified. Lithography, modeling in clay or wax, bookkeeping, shorthand writing, wood carving, chasing in gold and silver, and many other handicrafts, are now considered womanly occupations, and any one of them is apt to prove of more use to the girl who has her own way to make than a superficial knowledge of the ologies, languages or music. If a girl is rich let her be educated to the full extent of her ability; but she should also be trained in some profession or paying employment, that she may be independent of her money, and the more self-respecting on that account. If she chooses she can be as well-informed as to the world about her as her brother, and wield as great a power. In art, in science, in the field of letters, woman has the possibility of greatness. The storehouses of knowledge open as readily to her as to those of the other sex. She should accurately value the nobility of labor and the dignity of independence. Matrimony is not the only harbor in which she may safely anchor, and catching a husband is not the chief end of life. If an adequate physical training be added to mental culture, so that a woman has limbs she can get about with and a stomach that will digest her dinner, she will join to the vigor of precedent generations a mental bredth to which they never attained. This is the coming woman dreamed of by the poet, not those other

Laughing stocks of time,
Whose brains are in their hands and in their heels,
But fit to flaunt, to dress, to dance, to thrum,
To tramp, to scream, to burnish and to scour,
Forever slaves at home and fools abroad.

—Philadelphia Record.

Hints to Husbands.

Do not jest with your wife upon a subject in which there is danger of wounding her feelings. Remember that she treasures every word you utter. Do not speak of some virtue in another mans wife to remind your own of a fault. Do not reproach your wife with personal defect, for if she has sensibility you inflict a wound difficult to heal. Do not treat your wife with inattention when in company; it touches her pride, and she will not respect you more or love you better for it. Do not upbraid your wife in the presence of a third person; the sense of your disregard for her feelings will prevent her from acknowledging her fault. Do not entertain your wife with praising the beauty and accomplishments of other women. If you would have a pleasant home and a cheerful wife, pass your evenings under your own roof. Do not be stern and silent in your own house and remarkable for sociability elsewhere.

Profits of Dairying.

This experience, taken from an exchange, may be of interest to some of our readers:

"During the past year he has milked sixteen cows, five of which were with their first calves. They are all from five-eights to fifteen-sixteenths Jersey cattle. In figuring up his last year's business he discovers that from the sixteenth cows he has made 5,656 pounds of butter, an average of nearly one pound per day for every cow fed, for which he gets from 32 to 40 cents per pound the year round. His contract with the largest buyers is 32 cents, but others come along now and again and have to pay the retail price gotten by large buyers, viz: 40 cents; hence, after paying for packages and express charges, the butter for the year has netted him 34 cents per pound.

"A little figuring will show that he has made his cows, in milk, produce him a fraction over $120 per annum; a pretty good value for three or four good milch cows. Being asked how he fed them he replied: I feed my cows on grass all through the summer, but when they come to be milked, always give them good feed of dry bran, consisting of about one gallon. In winter, however, when grass is short and sometimes not comeatable, he keeps his cows pretty close to the stable, allowing them exercise in going to and coming from water, and feeding them on chopped sheaf oats moistened with water and mixed with bran and crushed corn and cob meal. Two-thirds of this mixture is composed of chopped sheaf oats, the remainder of bran and corn and cob meal."

Be Careful What You Sign.

With the advent of Spring, the confidence sharpers who prey upon the farmers, come out of their winter-quarters and begin active operations. The lightning-rod man will be closely followed by the clerical-looking personage, who is supplied with a large amount of cheek and a book of chromo representations of new and wonderful flowers and fruits. After a few days, the man with the Egyptian powder that is death to all buggy pests, will wait upon you, and as harvest draws on apace, you will be favored with a call from the smooth-tongued individual who wishes you to take an agency for a new and marvelous sickle-grinder. It matters not what schemes be theirs, they all have traits in common. All are sleek in dress, face and speech; all flatter; all propose to give you more than your money's worth; all have something new and marvelous; all are frauds.

Never buy on the recommendation of a stranger alone; and if that stranger promises to give you much for little, set him down as a fraud. Perhaps the meanest and most audacious of all these pleasing thieves, is the one who asks you to sign a paper. It may appear to be only an order the most safe harmless; it may appear to be only a contract for a small amount of goods; be sure it is some scheme to defraud. Don't sign it! The advice we give is sweeping:—Don't sign any paper for a stranger! It is the only safe rule. Of course, the fraud is hid; of course, the project is put in a charming light; if there were any show of dishonesty, you would not be swindled. It will be something new, for the sharper, well knows that if you heard of it you will not be duped. It will appear all right; but don't sign the paper.

These men are abepts in swindling. They have brains and shrewdness, and put them to disreputable use. Their stories are plausible, because they have cudgelled their brains to make them so. They will cover flattery with a show of sincerity. They will even use the cloak of religion to clothe their vile schemes. Yes, they'll convince you in spite of yourself. You will be sure it is all right. Stop! Before you sign the paper, remember never sign a paper for a stranger. Don't do it!

The New England Homestead says that present appearances indicate that the acreage of potatoes to be planted this season will be much less than last. This is, of course, owing to the low price which has prevailed all over the country the past season.

Gen. Grant Wilson thinks that "the unveiling in Central Park of a magnificent statue of Columbus will be one of the pleasant features of the celebration of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America, eight years hence."

CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.

A great change is working in the cotton business, especially in which the planter and consumer are rapidly being brought closer together—eastern mills mostly buying the raw material directly from the southern interior markets, while a few years ago they purchased largely from New York and Boston dealers.

Hon. Thomas L. Clingman, representative from North Carolina, has written a long letter, showing the advantages of wet tobacco, as a poultice applied for inflammation, wounds, sprains, sore throat, erysipelas of the head, sciatica, etc. It must be the natural leaf and not the manufactured article. Mr. Clingman cites a large variety of cases where relief and permanent cures was effected.

Judah P. Benjamin's career was a romantic one. That the son of an English Jew, born in the West Indies, should become so prominent in law and politics in an American state as to be elected United States senator from Louisiana at the age of 40, was sufficiently remarkable, but not so wonderful as the fact that, fleeing to England after the downfall of the confederacy, when nearly 55 years old, he should forge his way to the very front rank at a bar where the outsider finds far harder obstacles to overcome than in this country. The pride of race which the Hebrew feels does not seem strange in the light of such a record.

Recent statistics show that the cost of living at German universities, notwithstanding the fact that the Germans are becoming fonder of spending money than they once were, is still very low as compared with that in America. Rent, food, and clothes are all cheap, and there it is not the fashion, as with us, to be lavish, so that the competition in expenditure, of which so many well-meaning but weak-minded American undergraduates are the the victims, is practically unknown. Many American parents find it to their advantage to send their children abroad for higher education, on account of cheapness, irrespective of thoroughness and other considerations.

High-toned Boston Merchants have been charged with a system of "boycotting" more objectionable than anything of the kind originating in trade-unions. The story is to the effect that certain dry goods merchants have entered into a compact not to hire help from each other nor to encourage any advance in salary, and that when an agent for a Philadelphia house went to Boston some days ago, and advertised for clerks, these Boston merchants stationed their floor-walkers at the place appointed by the Philadelphia agent, and all the clerks making application were spotted and blacklisted and many have been dismissed. It has been generally believed, and in former years Boston was particularly famous for the belief that in this country every man had a right to avail himself of every opportunity offered to better his condition, and it is gratifying to know that the conduct of those merchants is severely condemned by the press and a large body of people.

The last report of the department of agriculture regretfully announces the experiment to introduce the cultivation of the tea plant in this country as a failure. After expending twenty-five thousand dollars in tea farming the admission is made that the climate conditions are unfavorable to its growth, and that its culture is unprofitable. Gen. Le Duc the former chief of the department does not agree with the views of the present commissioner. He thinks American tea can be raised and has been raised, that is as good as the best imported varieties, and that the object is worth the expenditure of a very large sum of money in the way of experiments. Tea raising in this country has not had a fair trial, but specimens raised were not inferior to any. The best tea testers in New York failed to discern any difference between the American and the best foreign, and those who have enjoyed Gen. Le Duc's hospitality at Hastings will readily admit that a cup of his American tea could not be distinguished from the product of China or Japan.

Of the nineteen million acres of Scotland, twelve persons possess one-fourth; seventy one-half, and 1,700, about nine-tenths. This statement was made by the chairman at a recent large and spirited meeting in Glasgow of the Scottish Farmers Alliance, and the fact provoked loud cries of "Shame." Another speaker said that during a long day's walk in a deer forest the only live things he saw were a woman and an adder; and, referring to the crowded, comfortless quarters of the almost homeless poor, he declared: "Ye are of more value than many rabbits or a few deer." These are specimen straws showing the agitation before which the injustice of the British land system will finally fall. The introduction of restrictions in Congress, too long delayed, will save the United States a vast deal of trouble hereafter, should they be embodied into the laws of the country. Wealthy Americans and foreign corporations are rapidly absorbing the best land in the territories, and unless restricted, will soon become the lords of the soil to the exclusion of the small homesteaders.

Nuggets of Foreign News.

The difficulty between the Mexican government and the banks has been settled. A loan of £1,000,000 will be secured from a foreign syndicate.

Tuesday was a busy day in London. Hundreds of American travelers in Europe read in their morning papers of tottering banks in New York, and fearing that their drafts and letters of credit from the United States would become worthless, lost no time in presenting them for payment. All were promptly accommodated, and regained confidence when they found that their securities were still good. In addition to the letters of credit that were personally presented, drafts and orders for money by telegraphic transfer were received from many points on the continent, and telegrams making anxious inquiries as to the insolvency of this or that bank or firm of private bankers kept pouring in during the day. With these exceptions the excitement in London over the Wall street flurry has subsided.

Near Landy depot, on Plain St. Denis, France, one railroad is carried over another. Tuesday night, the 13th, owing to an error, a freight train on the upper road ran into a siding, and was precipitated upon the line beneath, at the very moment an express train to Boulogne was passing. The engine driver of the Boulogne train was killed, and thirty-one passengers were injured.

Valentine Baker and the Queen.

A monster petition for the restoration of Valentine Baker Pasha to his colonelcy in the British army is in preparation, and will soon be submitted to the queen. It has already received over twelve thousand signatures, including nearly every officer of the army now in England, many peers, members of the house of commons, ladies, clergymen, professional men and mechanics. The movement seems to have good prospects of success. It is reported on high authority that the prince of Wales, who has been Baker's most active advocate ever since his adventure with Miss Dickinson in a railway compartment, has at last succeeded in persuading the queen to consent to the proposed pardon and restoration.

Senators' Sweethearts.

In his committee room the other day Senator Sawyer was telling of a letter he had just received from an old sweetheart who refused him forty years ago because he was poor, and married another fellow who had a little more money. She had heard of his great wealth and influence, and wrote to tell him that she was a widow in distressing circumstances. The senator said he sent her a check for the sake of auld lang syne. When he had finished his story, Senator Palmer of Michigan told of a similar experience. A woman he wanted to marry when he was a young man, but who jilted him because of his poverty, had written him recently asking for a position in the treasury department, and he was trying to get her one.

Fearful Loss of Life.

The Troy (N. Y.) Times publishes some interesting facts concerning the loss of life through calamities of various sorts during the the first four months of the present year. During this period there have been thirty-three disasters, involving a loss of ten lives and upward, the total loss aggregating 2,154. Among the greater of these calamities were that of the steamer Hwai-Yuen, China, 207; steamer City of Columbus, 101; Crested Butte mine, 60; massacre of Christians, Tonquin, 300; Caspian fishermen drowned, 50; Southern cyclones, 400; Pocahontas mine, 154; the Daniel Steinmann, 120; circus at Bucharest, 100; Spanish railroad accident, 90; the State of Florida, 135. During the first third of 1883 the total of recorded fatalities involving the loss of ten or more lives was 1,990. A record of all the minor casualties would, of course, show a large increase in these totals. It would seem, therefore, that the present year promises to be fully as calamitous, if not more so, than the last, not taking into consideration a repitition of the Java earthquake, with its total of 100,000 victims. Such a disaster is not likely, in the nature of things, to occur soon again, though, of course, no one can reckon with confidence on the future.

Suicide of Dr. Clark at St. Paul, Minn.

Between 8 and 9 o'clock on the 16th inst, Oscar Clark living on Chicago avenue in West St. Paul, Minn, committed suicide. He told his wife to lie down with their two little children and try to go to sleep. Shortly after she had got into bed he woke her up and told her he was bleeding to death, and by the time she arose and turned up the light he was gasping his last. While lying on a lounge, with a pair of shears he cut a gash on the inside of his left leg, just below the groin, about three inches cross-ways, severing the large artery. Dr. Clark was a graduate of Ann Arbor, Mich., and was about forty-three years of age. He came to St. Paul last November, and removed to the West side in December. He was very poor and out of health, suffering from some disorder of the stomach, to relieve the pain of which he has been compelled to take opium for some time past. He was unsuccessful in building up a practice, and was compelled to earn a livelihood by sawing wood, while his wife took in washing. They were living in a room about 8x10 feet, and everything about it indicated poverty. He was the son of a successful physician, and was himself well educated and used to comfort, luxury and refined surroundings. The deed was undoubtedly the result of despair.

Cash Run Down and Shot.

Gov. Thompson of South Carolina has received the following:

Cheraw, S. C., May 15.—To Gov. Hugh S. Thompson—I went with a posse last night to arrest W. Bogan Cash, and instructed my men not to fire unless it was absolutely necessary. We surrounded the house and barn, placing two men between the house and barn and two between the barn and the swamp. Finding Cash in the barn I ordered it surrounded. Cash came out and fired. The fire was returned after Cash fired several shots. He was killed, being riddled with bullets. None of the posse was struck except W. H. Hilton, whose fingers were shot off by Cash.

[Signed] E. L. King,
Deputy Attorney General.

It was in February last that Cash, in cold blood and without provocation, shot and killed Marshal Richards in the street. He fled, accompanied by his father, Col. Cash, a prominent citizen of that part of the state. On Feb. 23, the father and son were surrounded in a house at the border of a swamp. The latter managed to escape, while the father, while holding the posse at bay with a revolver, surrendered, and after remaining in jail a few days on the charge of assisting his son to escape, was released on bail. Ever since that time the posse has hunted Bogan. A week ago it succeeded in corralling him in a house, but again did he elude the grasp of his pursuers. This was at some distance from Cheraw, and Bogan, it would appear from the above dispatch, was found and killed on his father's premises, or in the immediate neighborhood.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS

In the debate in the Senate Indian education bill, Senator Ingalls of Kansas said he knew individual instances of extreme interest shown by it, but it did not make any appreciable change in the Indian character. Of course it was desirable, as far as possible, to ameliorate the condition of the Indian tribes; but if an educated Indian returned to his tribe he found himself an alien and outcast. His last condition was worse than his first; yet if he came into competition with a white man he was lost. The best thing that could be done for an Indian would be to make him amenable to law, which he was not. He had hard enough of the rather stale denunciations of the government for its extermination of Indians. There had been no such extermination. There were as many Indians on the continent to-day as in 1492. The government had, on the contrary, always shown leniency to the Indians. It was as absurd and futile to teach Indians the Greek alphabet and differential calculus, serve him dinner in courses, and show him how to wear a high hat and gold watch, as it would be to go among a herd of Texas broadhorn steers and endeavor to turn them into Durhams and thoroughbreds by reading Alexander's herd book in cattle pens.

Senator Dawes replied that Ingalls was guilty of libel on the whole human race when he intimated that any of its members were incapable of being trained and educated.

The senate passed without comment, objection or debate, the Edmunds bill to place U. S. Grant on the retired list of the army, with the rank and pay of a general. It is quite probable that the house will concur, but not without some discussion.

In announcing a pair Tuesday upon Senator Frye's motion for a committee of conference, Senator Cockrell said: "I am paired with the distinguished senator from Vermont, who is compelled to be absent to-day for the first time in twenty-nine years' service in the congress of the United States. I refer to Senator Morrill."

The bill providing a civil government for Alaska, which has passed the house, provides: The territory of Alaska shall constitute a civil and judicial district, the temporary seat of government of which is established at Sitka. A governor shall be appointed with authority to see that the laws enacted for the district are enforced, and who shall be ex-officio commander in chief of the militia, with power to call it out when necessary to the due execution of the law. A district court is established, which shall hold at least two terms each year, one at Sitka and the other at Wrangels. A clerk, district attorney and marshal are also provided for, and authority given for the appoinment of four commissioners with powers and jurisdiction of commissioners of United States circuit courts. The general laws of the State of Oregon are declared to be the law of the district, so far as the same may be applicable. Officers shall be appointed for the term of four years, and shall receive the following salaries: Governor $5,000; district attorney, 2,500; marshal, $2,500; judge, $3,000; clerk, $2,500.

Bills passed the house extending the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in Wyoming, and provided that hereafter the legislature of Dakota shall consist of twenty-four members of the council, and forty-eight members of the house.

The house committee on invalid pensions unanimously agreed to report favorably a bill increasing certain pensions prepared by Representative Matson as a substitute for a bill of similar character. the substitute provides:

All persons on or hereafter placed on the pension roll, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, have lost an arm or leg shall be entitled to a pension of $40 per month, and those who have lost a hand or foot, to a pension of $30 per month, and if they have received a wound or other disability in addition thereto, shall receive a pension of $50 per month; and all persons who have a leg amputated at the hip joint and all persons who lost an arm at the shoulder joint, shall be entitled to a pension of $50 per month; and all persons who lost an arm and leg shall be entitled to a pension of $72 per month.

The Sioux commission has been authorized to negotiate with the Sisseton, Wahpeton and Yankton Indians for the cession of portions of their reservations to the United States. The house committee on Indian affairs have informally agreed to the Sioux reservation bill. The amendments to the senate bill are not material, and will be no obstruction to its passage. The friends of the measure say they are willing to accept the amendments, and are confident the bill will go through the house and become a law this session. The bill will be considered in the house on the 31st, when bills from the Indian affairs committee will be the special order.

Senator Vest, on Wednesday, the 14th, desired to make a personal explanation. A statement has gone to the press he said, that the vote upon the bill to place Gen. Grant upon the retired list had been unanimous. He, however had voted against the bill. He had not called for the ayes and noes, nor made any factious opposition, because two years ago, when a similar bill was before the senate, he had spoken and voted against the bill, and given reasons for his opposition. He had no personal opposition to Gen. Grant, but was opposed to the principal of the bill.

The pension appropriation bill, as reported to the senate, reduces the amount of unexpended balance of the appropriation for the current fiscal year, to be reappropriated, from $84,000,000 to $60,000,000, strikes out the provision fixing compensation to pension agents at $10 per 100 vouchers paid in excess of 4,000, and reducing the number of pension agents to twelve, and the section providing that the fee of pension attorneys in all pension arrears, pension or bounty land claims shall be $10, except in cases where a special written contract is filed with the commissioner of pensions, when the fee may amount to not more than $25.

The senate has confirmed the following nominations: Peter W. Stolberg, receiver of public moneys, Taylor's Falls, Minn.; John H. Bowman, Gunnison, Colo., agent for Indians of the Navajo agency, New Mexico; William A. Pirie, Rhode Island, Indian Inspector; T. McF. Patton, Salem, Ore., consul of the United States at Osaka and Hiogo; Rudolph W. Wolffsohn, Buffalo, N. Y., consul of the United States at Mannheim.

In the senate on Thursday a resolution was offered directing the finance committee to investigate and learn whether the late New York bank failures were due to violations of the national banking laws. A bill was introduced to prevent officials of national banking associations from speculating. The bill to loan $1,000,000 in aid of the New Orleans exposition passed with some amendments. Adjourned till Monday.

The House on Tuesday, had an animated debate on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill and all amendments proposing to increase or maintain salaries reduced by the bill were voted down. The senate amendments to the New Orleans exposition bill were concurred in.

Following is the text of the bill introduced by Senator Cullom, to prohibit speculation by officers of national banking associations:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for the president, cashier, teller, or other chief executive officer of any national banking association, having a capital stock amounting to $200,000 or more, to deal, trade or otherwise engage in speculation in stocks, bonds or other securities, or in grain, provisions, produce or oil, on margins on his own individual account or for his own personal profit, either directly or indirectly, or to have any partnership or other financial interest in the operations of any private banking of brokerage firm, or business. Any such officer who violates the provisions of this act, or any person who aids or abets such officer in violation the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned, not less than one year, or more than five years, or fined more than $10,000.

A report has been submitted to accompany the bill reported from the house committee on public lands, providing for the repeal of the pre-emption and timber culture laws and amendment of the homestead law. The committee say:

"We believe it should be the policy of the government to give those of our citizens who are without homes such amount of the public domain as will make them comfortable homesteads, where they enter upon it in good faith, intending to make it their homes and cultivate and live upon it for a fixed period of time, and we believe 160 acres should be the maximum. Under the pre-emption, homestead and timber culture laws as they now stand, one person may become the owner of 480 acres of the public domain—160 acres under each. This is too large an amount of land, in our opinion, for any one person to acquire in this manner. We think the policy of the government should be to furnish as many of its citizens with comfortable homes as long in the future as possible, and 160 acres is sufficient for this purpose. By giving them this amount, it will not be many years until all our public domain will be taken up. The pre-emption law was passed in 1841, the homestead law in 1862, and the timber culture act in 1873. When the homestead law was enacted, the pre-emption law should have been repealed. The timber culture law should never have been passed. We have, therefore, in a substitute, provided for the repeal of the pre-emption and timber culture acts and amendment of the homestead law."

WALL STREET PANIC.

Black Friday Recalled by the Scenes of Last Thursday.

New York telegram of the 14th say: The panic on the stock exchange to-day was the most disastrous since 1873. Its approach has been gradual but certain, and it is one of the few financial disasters which have been predicted. The net result of the day was the suspension of the Metropolitan bank, the failure of seven broker firms, a depreciation of values to the extent of ten millions, and an advance in money to 3 per cent per diem. Of the brokers, but two were large houses—those of Hatch & Foote and O. M. Bogart & Co., and the failure of the Metropolitan bank has probably been partial. As compared with the day of Jay Cooke & Co.'s failure and Black Friday, in 1869, this latest panic is rather a tame affair, but it shook the street, and its effects will be felt for a long time. Brokers were generally at their offices early, as an exciting day was expected to follow on change from the temporary suspension of A. Dyett & Co. yesterday and the Second National Bank complication.

Suddenly a broker rushed in from the New street entrance, forced himself into the Western Union crowd and offered a thousand shares ½ below the market. Instant and redoubled confusion ensued. Blocks of stocks by the thousands were hurled on the market at any price. The tape at which hundreds of dealers stood anxiously in brokers' offices showed plainly that a panic had struck the street. Union Pacific ran down 2 per cent. and other stocks followed. Orders to sell poured in from up town and from the country, and pandemonium reigned in the room. A few sharp strokes of Chairman Hatch's gravel brought a semblance of order, and the brokers crowded hurriedly around the chair. "Messrs. Nelson, Robinson & Co. regret to announce their inability to meet their contracts," read the chairman, in a clear voice. The room became more demoralized. Then quickly were announced the suspensions of Goffe & Randall, O. M. Bogart & Co., J. C. Williams and Hatch & Foote. The last house is a large one, and alarm overtopped excitement. Brokers were asking themselves where the thing was going to stop. When the announcement came that the Metropolitan bank, at Broadway and Pine streets with its $4,000,000 surplus, $8,000,000 in deposits, and $10,000,000 in loans, had suspended, this important event added greatly to the excitement and panic, both in and out of the exchange.

Most exaggerated reports were circulated immediately after the Metropolitan suspension. One was to the effect that Drexel, Morgan & Co. had a $2,000,000 account in the Metropolitan bank. This was promptly denied by the firm. It was known that a run on the Second National bank was in progress, and the suspension of the United States, the Phœnix, the Bank of the Republic, the Gallatin, the Fourth National, the Wall Street and other banks was expected. These banks are all sound institutions, and their officers hurried out statements contradicting the reports. Depositors anxiously hurried to several of the down-town institutions to draw their money. In some cases the line of depositors reached far out on the sidewalk, and idle but interested crowds gathered to watch them but there were no further casualties.

At 1:30 the bank presidents who compose the clearing house association met to consider the situation. These gentlemen represent the leading financial institutions of New York, and their action in times of financial trouble has an important bearing on the situation. They met in 1869 and 1873, as they met to-day, and adopted measures which reassured the public. They simply resolved that the associated banks will take care of themselves and assist each other with cash when necessary. The loan certificates, based on collaterals, will stand for so much cash in the clearings between the banks, and in the case of stringency in money must afford great relief.

Of the nine failures announced, by far the most important is that of the Metropolitan bank. The firms of O. M. Bogart & Co., and Hatch & Foot were well known, and were leading firms. The other firms are comparatively unimportant. The suspension of the Metropolitan one of the leading financial institutions of the country, is a very different matter. This bank is presided over by George I. Seney, the great railroad proprietor, philanthropist and speculator.

The Metropolitan bank was $500,000 debtor to the clearing house this morning. George I. Seney, president of the bank, was a partner in Nelson Robinson & Co. Seney's Sons were also partners. The direct cause of the failure was a balance of half a million against the bank in the clearing house which could not be met. The other banks would not consent to anything but a cash settlement, until they had examined into the condition of the Metropolitan bank. The announcement that Hatch & Foote, bankers and brokers, of 12 Wall street, had failed, produced a most depressing effect upon the already overburdened street.

Henry Clews thought that by pooling their assets the banks had really mande impossible further bank failures. Ex-Controller Knox was of the same opinion, and said he thought a safe but cautious market would result. Sidney Dillon said: "I see no adequate cause for fear, and no reason to believe there will be any widespread trouble." Jay Gould and President Dowd, of the Bank of North America, both call it a "clearing storm."

Jesse Seligman thought the worst over, and said the failures to-day were due simply to a want of confidence.

Secretary Folger was at the subtreasury all the morning. He was visited by almost all the prominent financiers in Wall street. He expresses the determination to use all the power of the government to prevent a panic, and said he would act promptly to the utmost limit of his authority. The secretary telegraphed Washington ordering the immediate payment of the 127th call for bonds, and if necessary he will order another call for $10,000,000.

National Ante-Monopolist Convention.

The National Conventions of the Anti-Monopolists was held in Chicago on Wednesday last. There were about 200 delegates present. Alson J. Streator of Ill., was temporary chairman. Committees on credentials, permanent organization and resolutions were appointed, one from each state. The call of the states showed sixteen states represented. The President said. The cause of the smallness of the convention was that many of its members were too poor to pay their fare, and because monopolistic railroads refused to give them the same rates which would be given delegates to other conventions. The speaker said that all the platform he wanted was, "We oppose all monopolies, we believe all men are created free and equal, and we believe in Gen. Benjamin F. Butler. After the adoption of the platform, which is about the same as usual, the convention proceed to nominate a candidate for president. Gen. Butler was put in nomination successively by Mrs. Todd of California, Mr. Roodey of New York and several others. Blanchard of Vermont put in nomination J. B. Weaver of Iowa. The chairman here announced that he had just had an interview with Mr. Weaver, and that that gentleman had not duly declared he would not except the nomination, but was in favor of Gen. Butler. Barud of Nebraska nominated Allen G. Thurman. On an informal ballot Butler received 124, Thurman 7, and Solon Chase of Maine 1. Butler was declared the nominee of the convention. Adjourned.

The grading of the Wisconsin, Iowa, & Nebraska has been completed nearly to Cedar Falls, and track laying is to commence next Monday. The tax voted by the town of Waterloo in aid of this road not having been accepted before the new law was enacted, is invalid. The Cedar Falls tax was duly accepted and is valid.

Cremation of Laborers.

A west-bound freight collided with a gravel train on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad one mile east of Connellsville, Pa., Wednesday. A number of laborers, variously estimated at from twelve to twenty, were killed and many were injured. The scene of the disaster is on a sharp curve just west of the Speer Sand works. The freight train was heavily laden with ore. The camp train consisted of six cars. It contained about fifty men from the Pittsburg Southwestern railroad, on their way to Ohio Ryle Falls to work on the grading for a double track on the east end of this division. The trains were going at a high rate of speed, and came together with a terrible crash. The engines remained on the track and telescoped each other into the smokestack, but the heavy tenders jumped into the air and fell, the freight tender upon its engine, the gravel tender back on the first car in the rear of it. Here was a scene of death. Six men were killed outright in this car, and four others, fastened down by broken timbers, were roasted to death, the car catching fire from the overturned stove and burning up before the stupefied survivors could comprehend the awful situation of their shrieking companions. Three men escaped from the rear, and one of them said that the fire could have been extinguished had water been applied in time.

Death of a Noted Hoosier.

Gen. William H. H. Terrell died at Indianapolis, on Friday, the 16th, of consumption. Gen. Terrell was one of the best known men in Indiana, and had a national reputation and acquaintance. During the war he was Gov. Morton's financial secretary and adjutant general of the state. Under Gen. Grant's administration he was third assistant postmaster general. Upon retiring from that position he was appointed pension agent at Indianapolis, and for the last three years had been secretary of the republican state central committee. His report, in several volumes of Indiana in the war for the Union, is a model of accuracy and a valuable contribution to the history of the state.

The New York Panic Ended.

Bradstreet's Journal of Saturday the 17th, says of the financial outlook: "The violence of the storm seems spent. Whatever happens now will be accepected as its after effects, and with more or less feeling of resignation. Whether or the worst has been seen is a matter which no one can tell, though there is a superfluity of assurance that it has. Those who have the best reasons of knowing the situation are by no means confident. Some of these may publicly say that all is over, but privately they do not express such confidence. But the scare has gone. The wildness of fright cannot be renewed. All the large operators have contributed and are still contributing to strengthen the market. We shall know by about the end of next week where we stand. At present Wall street is hopeful."

Northern Pacific Prosperity.

J. B. Montgomery of Oregon says in the New York Tribune: "Do you notice the large traffic over the Northern Pacific? When I came here early in February, the earnings were only $600,000 for the preceding month. I stated in print that the earnings in April would be $1,500,000. The first eighteen days of April show my estimate to have been correct. In May the earnings will be $1,600,000, and in October, which will be one of the best months, $2,000,000. The road will earn between $15,000,000 and $16,000,000 this year, and close on to $20,000,000 next year. It will take 50,000 emigrants to Washington and Oregon, beside what go to Dakota and Montana. Mr. Sam Houser, the Helena banker, told me that from his section parties interested with him will give 20,000 tons of freight to the Northern Pacific in 1885, from mines that were wholly undeveloped before the road was built."

Failures of a Week.

There were 187 failures and suspensions in the United States reported to Bradstreet's during the week ending the 17th against 132 in the preceding week, and 166, 116 and 88 in the corresponding weeks of 1883-82 and '81, respectively. About 72 per cent. were those of small traders whose capital was less than $5,000. The following were the important suspensions of banks, bankers and brokers during the past week: New York City, Fisk & Hatch, Hatch & Foote, Donnel, Lawson & Simpson, O. M. Bogart & Co., Hotchkiss, Burnham & Co., A. W. Dimack & Co., Nelson, Robinson & Co., H. C Hardy & Sons, Goffee & Randle; Brooklyn, Atlantic State bank; Newark, N. J., the Newark Savings institution; Boston, F. A. Hawley & Co.; Bradford, Pa., Whitney & Wheeler; Quincy, Ill.; Union bank; St. Joseph, Mo., State Savings bank; Tucson, Ariz., Hudson & Co.; Atlanta, Ga., John H. James. Among the other suspensions were the Northwestern Manufacturing and Car company of Stillwater, Minn.; Charles E. Young & Co., produce, Philadelphia, and Henry B. Mayo, Boston, canned goods.

What Senator Sabin Says.

Senator Sabin on returning to Stillwater on Friday, was besieged by business associates and journalistic interviewers. He had little to say regarding the financial troubles of the several enterprises with which he is connected, preferring to wait until he has an opportunity to get at the facts in the case. He is confident, however, that Seymour, Sabin & Co., have enough assets to take care of everything, and denies that there has been any improper application of the proceeds of the sales of stock. As to matters political, the senator is positive in saying that he has never expected or intended to retain the chairmanship of the national committee longer than until the meeting of the Chicago convention. And even if he might desire to do so, he intimates that he has no overweening desire to run his chances of the penitentiary under the newly-discovered civil service law. He also denies explicity that he has stated that New York's financial troubles would hurt the Republican party, and also the rumors that he is financially interested in Loren Fletcher's candidacy.

Cœur D'Alene Impressions.

Dr. Day, postmaster of St. Paul, during his Western trip, passed near the Cœur d'Alene mines. He says that from the best information that he could obtain from $3,000 to $5,000 per day is being taken out. No quartz discoveries have yet been made, although old miners expect that daily. There are about 5,000 people in the mines. Belknap seems to be the favorite port of entry although many go from Spokane and Thompson's Falls. The snow is gone at the mines, although on the mountains it is ten feet deep. In the valleys the weather is delightful. There has been no rain and none is expected until October. The vegetation is much farther advanced than in Minnesota. The air is very bracing and has that peculiar coolness found only from high mountains and on the seashore. The doctor is very enthusiastic over the scene in the Rockies and up the Columbia river. He is very much improved in health, and says his month's trip has done him an immense deal of good.

How Ward Caught Fish.

President Fish of the exploded Marine bank of New York says of Ward:

Within the past several months Mr. Ward has represented to me that he had a confidential understanding by which he furnished to the government the supplies. I supposed that through the Grant family, or the friends of the Grants, he might have some such contracts. He said it would be a good thing to get contracts for government supplies, and mentioned Elkins and Chaffee, and thought they were a portion of the scheme, and that their friendship and knowledge had been of advantage to Ward as the partner of Mr. Chaffee's son-in-law and of Gen. Grant's son. I am now satisfied the whole thing was an invention and a myth. I do not believe he had any kind of contract. I don't suppose now Gen. Grant knew anything about it. But before these disclosures I did think that Grant or Grant's friends might have given Mr. Ward the opportunity. Mr. Ward said to me on at least one occasion that I I now saw the advisability of his having brought the Grants into business relations with us. He referred to the matter of these confidential contracts.

Important Supreme Court Decision.

The supreme court of Minnesota rendered a decision in the case of the Red River & Lake of the Woods railroad company vs. Andrew Sture, from Polk county. The railroad company built its line through the farm of Sture—160 acres—and damages were asked for the right of way. Sture appealed to the Polk county court, and a decision was rendered in his favor awarding him the damages claimed. The railroad company appealed to the supreme court, and set up the plea that Sture had no right to object to a railroad through his land, as he had become possessed of it through the United States homestead law. The company claimed that under the United States laws of 1866, highways could be constructed or opened through such lands; it was also asserted that the Polk county jury had rendered a verdict in favor of Adam Sture, instead of Andrew Sture, and that papers in the case, lost from the files, were replaced by the court with copies. All these objections were overruled, and the decision of the Polk county court was affirmed. This decision is in direct opposition to decisions of other supreme courts. It has been held that, until the possessor of the land received a patent, he has no right to prevent the construction of railroads through his land; that the mere entering of the land under the homestead act did not complete his title to ownership. Judge Mitchell holds that a homesteader has rights, and that railroads cannot trespass upon his property without paying full damages and being amenable to the courts.

Sport Loving Congressmen.

Washington Special: Now that the races are over, congress may be expected to resume business again. Each day of the week a quorum of either branch of congress could have been found at the driving park and the senate actually adjourned over until Monday in order to give the distinguished statesmen of that body a chance to see the horses run. But the racing craze has prevaded the entire city. The cabinet and diplomatic corps have gone to see them, and the president himself was anxious to attend, but was detained by visitors. About one hundred members of congress, veterans of the war, went with the excursion to visit the battlefields of Virginia, and business has been practically at a standstill all the week, notwithstanding the session is five months old and legislation much behind.

What Would Bankrupt Army Officers.

Washington Letter: Gen. Sheridan has shown signs since he took hold of the army of an intention to pursue a vigorous policy. For one thing, he has been astonishing the army by ordering a series of exchanges of stations between regiments in the west. He believes that for their mutual good and for the good of the service exchanges of stations should be more frequent. An exchange means a great deal to the regiments concerned. One has been perhaps ten years at eastern post—Fort McHenry, Baltimore, for example. It has taken root. Suddenly, often with very little warning, it must go out in the Indian country to resume routine life under totally different conditions. At the same time a regiment which has been a fixture for a decade in New Mexico or Montana comes into civilization again. It is often quite as disagreeable for the Western regiment to come East as for the Eastern regiment to go West. "Why sir," said an old army officer, "if the regiment at Fort Blank, Dak., were ordered East to-day it would bankrupt every officer in its roster. Every one of them had some local scheme for making money—a farm, or a mine, or a hord of cattle, or something that they could not give up without great loss. From time immemorial army officers have always done a little money making as they went along out on the plains. Take Dodge City, Kan. That is built on a town cite purchased by an army surgeon from a squatter for a few hundred dollars, and afterward sold by the army surgeon for more than $50,000. That's one of numerous cases. Most of those officers who have been long in the West, where they have any shrewdness at all, have some money laid up against retirement day."

An outrageous scene occurred at the Catholic cemetery in Rockford, Ill. The burial of Mike Connors was in progress, when his brother Thomas, rather the worst for whisky, pulled out a knife and commenced prying off the silver plate, saying he had furnished it and proposed to keep it. Her brother, Morris Sisten, threatened to pummel the desecrator of the dead, and a genuine row seemed inevitable, when outsiders interfered and the burial proceeded.

The whole affair has been kept very secret, and no one outside of the prison officials there is yet aware of the pardon of Bruce. The citizens of Keokuk, especially, will be surprised.

THE NEW DYNAMITE GUN.

The Instrument That May Revolutionize Warfare.

Boston Herald.

The Secretary of War has detailed Lieutenant E. L. Zalinsky, of the Fifth Artillery, to superintend the experiments that are daily being made at Fort Hamilton with the new dynamite gun, a larger and more perfect one than the small "trial" gun hitherto used. Lieutenant Zalinsky for three weeks past has made daily experiments with the small gun. To a reporter who visited Fort Hamilton, the Lieutenant spoke of the gun as follows: "I am more than pleased with it. I came here thinking that it was merely another 'crank' invention, but experience has taught me that it is destined to revolutionize modern warfare. It will really do all that is claimed for it. It will throw a dynamite cartridge of from 100 to 125 pounds accurately and without exploding it from a mile to a mile and a half with sufficient force to penetrate an iron armor four inches thick, and, moreover, all the remaining 'work' that is stored in the projectile at the time it strikes the enemy's vessel is equivolent to so much tampering, thus insuring a blow of great force against the hull of the vessel."

"Of how great a force?" asked the reporter.

"Great enough," replied the lieutenant, "in my opinion to blow up the largest and heaviest vessel that is now afloat. It has been proved that 100 pounds of dynamite exploded three feet under the water will destroy a first-class man-of-war lying seventeen feet off. It has also been proved repeatedly that dynamite has a downward tendency when it explodes—that is, unlike gunpowder, it shatters all beneath it as well as everything above it, and I therefore claim that when one hundred pounds of dynamite are thrown say on the Thunderer, the dynamite will either blow the vessel to pieces or so badly shatter it that it will keep out of our way for some time to come."

"How does this gun," inquired the reporter, "compare with the ordinary torpedo?"

"I think it considerably more effective. A torpedo may be stopped in its course and rendered useless by the enemy's booms or nettings, whereas nothing can prevent this projectile from flying through the air. Moreover, a torpedo is useless after being used, whereas this gun can be reloaded and refired in one minute. Then, again, think of the great difference in cost between the two. A torpedo costs $150, and, as I have said, can be used only once, while a projectile cast from this gun, which I believe will be more deadly in its effects, will certainly not cost over $10. And, lastly, a great merit I find in it is its comparative lightness and consequent easiness of locomotion. An eight-inch powder rifle weighs, for instance, ten tons, while this gun weighs scarcely two and a half. Altogether, I think it one of the greatest of modern inventions."

This new gun is a rather imposing looking structure as it stands on the highest and most conspicious elevation in Fort Hamilton. It is made of brass, is forty feet long, four inches in diameter, and one-quarter of an inch thick. It is placed on a carriage of light and angle iron, which weighs about fifteen hundred pounds and is about seven feet high. The reservoir that holds the compressed air which drives out the cartridge is placed immediately behind the gun, is 25 inches in diameter, 7 feet long and contains 14 charges of air. The projectile that holds the dynamite is a brass tube 2 feet long, 3¼ inches in diameter, and is attached to a wooden plug, tamping from the brass tube to the full size of the bore of the gun, and the shot is fired by gradual pressure of air from the reservoir, which is worked automatically.

The experiment made yesterday consisted in firing blank cartridges from Fort Hamilton at a target placed on Fort Wadsworth, a distance of about 2,214 feet. Five shots were fired, and they all landed within five feet of the target, which was pronounced by the officers as very successful firing for a first experiment.

The Belle's Stratagem.

From the Detroit Free Press.

Young Spoonogle never knows when to leave when he calls on a young lady. He likes the sound of his own voice so well that he talks on and on, while the poor girl grows light-headed with the tax on her strength, and wishes the mantelpiece of Elijah would fall on the tiresome caller.

There is a young lady on Lafayette avenue who made up her mind to give Spoonogle a lesson. So, last Sunday night, when he called, she was as cordial as possible up to eleven o'clock. Then, having had a four-volume history of Spoonogle's life, with an extended account of his influence in politics and business, she began to get dizzy and have a ringing in her ears. At that moment her young brother rushed into the room and said "Pa wants the morning paper, Sis!"

"Look in the vestibule, Willie," she answered, gently. "I think I heard the boy leaving them some hours ago."

Spoonogle never took the hint, but drawled on about the roller skating rink, and what a figure he cut on skates. The next interruption was from the head of the house, who entered briskly rubbing his hands.

"Good morning—good morning," he said cheerily. "Ha! Spoonogle, you're out early. Well, early birds, etc. It's going to be a fine day, from present appearances."

Spoonogle was dazed, but concluded the old man had been drinking, and sat back with a "come one, come all; this rock shall fly from its firm base as soon as yours truly" air, that was decided and convincing.

A half hour passed and the mother hurried in.

"Dear me, I'm late," she said as she entered. "I smelled the coffee an hour ago and knew breakfast was waiting, but—oh! Good morning, Mr. Spoonogle!"

Then the sweet youth took the hint, and, drawing himself together, he got out into the hall and opened the front door just as the hired girl rung a bell and the small boy yelled "Breakfast" over the balusters.

Exploration of New Guinea.

"In connexion with the Waltham Watch company, it may be stated that when the proprietors of The Age desired to present Mr. G. E. Morrison (the explorer of New Guinea) with a reliable chronometer, acting upon the advice of Mr. R. L. J. Ellery, the Government Astronomer, two Waltham were, however, procured for Mr. Morrison instead. These were kept at the Melbourne Observatory for a fortnight, and thoroughly and carefully tested, and were pronounced by Mr. Ellery, at the end of that time, to be better suited for Mr. Morrison's requirements than any chronometer."—Extract from the Melbourne Age.

MONTANA ROAD AGENTS

Paymaster Whipple Describes His Encounter With a Band of Highwaymen in Montana.

Fort Buford, Dak., Special Telegram, May 15.—I have interviewed Maj. Whipple, the paymaster who was attacked by road agents, and who has just reached the garrison. He says: "We left Glendive at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. Our party was composed of myself, my clerk, Mr. Such, and Sergeant Conrad, who was in command of my escort, which was made up of three men with two drivers. Mr. Such and I occupied the rear seat of the ambulance, Sergeant Conrad and driver on the front, while the others rode in the wagon immediately behind. Contrary to my usual caution, I had placed my money in the ambulance. At about 2:30 in the afternoon as we were driving quietly up through a deep ravine road, about four miles this side of Barnes' ranch, I heard rapid firing. I looked out and saw Sergeant Conrad firing to the left at a party of masked men, seven in number, who had opened a murderous fire upon us without a word of warning. Three of the seven men were firing directly into our ambulance, which fire was returned by the Sergeant in the BRAVEST AND MOST GALLANT MANNER.

At an early stage of the action, however, he received two mortal wounds, but continued to fire until the loss of blood so weakened him that he could no longer hold his rifle. About this time the driver received a scalp wound and fell down from his wagon, when Mr. Such and I jumped out. One of the mules was wounded, and the team becoming frightened, ran away with the ambulance, which contained the lieutenant and my money. Mr. Such and I were kept under a very heavy fire, and our escape was most miraculous. Fearing that the highwaymen would capture the ambulance, I immediately started in that pursuit, and made the best record of my life in running the mile. I was obliged to. I was successful in overtaking the mules and climbing into the ambulance. The sergeant—gallant fellow that he was—died in my arms about twenty minutes after being shot. I reached Scott's ranch, about eight miles from the scene of the murderous attack safely. In the meantime Mr. Such and the ambulance driver were covered by the rifles of the highwaymen and forced to return to the escort wagon. One of the men was badly wounded in the arm in the act of raising his carbine for a second shot. The villains, thinking that the escort wagon contained my safe, had paid but little attention to my escort beyond a few shots, which they sent unpleasantly near. They then began to search the escort, keeping the men and Mr. Such covered. Their search, of course, was fruitless. They seemed rather disappointed, and began to search the men and Mr. Such. They found a little tobacco on one of the men and from Such they took about $20 and a watch, which, however they returned. After destroying the carbines they ordered the driver to his seat and allowed the party to go on. Upon arrival at Scott's I at once sent my courier to Fort Buford for a surgeon and additional escort, as we fully anticipated an attack before night. Upon receipt of the intelligence Gen. Whistler ordered Maj. Bell, Seventh cavalry to start with his troops. He made a forced night march, and reached us at 4 in the morning, greatly to our relief, we having been on guard duty the entire night. Maj. Bell has instructions to do everything in his power to capture the band. He has taken with him three Indian escorts and an interpreter."

The New Methodist Bishops.

At the National Conference in Philadelphia, on Thursday, the 15th, an election of four bishops was effected.

The tellers appointed to conduct the election reported as a result of the first ballot no choice.

Rev. J. M. Walden, D. D.	167

On the second ballot these two gentlemen were chosen, the former receiving 273 votes and the latter 214; necessary to choice, 204. Rev. Dr. Ninde is of the Detroit conference and president of the Jarrett Biblical institute. Rev. Dr. Walden is of the Western Book Concern in Cincinnati. The third ballot has resulted in the choice of Rev. Willard J. Mallotien, D. D. The fourth ballot was then taken for a fourth bishop:

Whole number of votes cast	399

Spring Catechism.

WHY IS IT.—You should be particularly careful to clean up the system and purify the blood in the spring, before the approach of warm weather. Because the hearty consumption of food and the indoor life of the winter months result in a large amount of food being taken into the stomach, a portion of which has not been digested. This accumulation of refuse matter forms into a decaying mass which poisons the system and stagnates the blood.

WHAT TO DO.—Remove this deposit, cleanse the system, and purify the blood of all foul impregnations. By so doing you remove the cause of nine-tenths of spring complaints and diseases; you avoid malaria, billiousness, boils, blotches, yellow skin, etc. Root out the lingering germs of disease and prepare the system to successfully repel the complaints peculiar to hot weather.

WHEN you want to accomplish this thoroughly, and with the least expense, Burdock Blood Bitters is the medicine. A purely vegetable preparation. It searches out and carries off all impurities from the body, purifies the blood, cures indigestion, dyspepsia, kidney and liver complaints. It is not a violent purgative, nor a sickening decoction, but a medicine that is pleasant to take, will do you good, and demand your endorsing Burdock Blood Bitters as the greatest discovery in medicine. Sold by all druggists. Price $1.00.

FOSTER, MILBURN & CO., Buffalo, N. Y. Props.

An old man giving the name of George Brown, entered the Chambers street hospital, New York, in an exhausted condition. He said he was a cattle dealer from Des Moines, Iowa, and had been drugged and robbed of $100 while in the cars.

The Lamott-Nelson wedding at Chippewa Falls, which created such a furor a few weeks ago had a rather unromantic ending. The groom knocked down and otherwise maltreated the wife. She left for her home and parents at Warren, Minn.

PRESIDENTIAL FAVORITES.

Some Interesting Facts Concerning the Men Who Stand Closest to the Chief Executive.

"Visitors who, from curiosity or business, have called at the White House, must have been impressed by the courteous yet systematic manner with which they were received and escorted through the mansion. The gentlemen whose duty it is to receive all persons coming to the White House are Colonel E. S. Denmore, Mr. John T. Rickard and Mr. T. F. Pendel, and they have occupied their present positions through the various administrations since and even during the war. Mr. Pendel was President Lincoln's body-guard; saw him to his carriage the fatal night on which he visited Ford's theater, and he now has in his possession the blood-stained coat which Mr. Lincoln wore on that memorable occasion. There is not a public man in America to-day who does not know, and who is not known by, these gentlemen, and reminiscenes of public and social life which they can recount would fill a congressional volume. During the weary yet exciting years of war; through the more peaceful times of Grant's administration; while Hayes held the reins of government, and when Garfield was shot, it was these men who stood in the executive mansion, welcoming the advent of each new administration, bowing at its departure, and receiving both martyrs through its portals.

During that long, hot and never to be forgotton summer when President Garfield lay between "two worlds," the nation became aware of the deadly malarial influence which hung about the White House. But all through that period these three men never deserted their posts for a single day, although each one was suffering intensely. In conversation with the writer, Colonel Densmore said:

"It is impossible to describe the tortures I have undergone. To be compelled to smile and treat the thousands of visitors who come here daily with courtesy when one is in the greatest agony requires a tremendous effort. All that summer I had terrible headaches, heart-burn and a stifling sensation hat sometimes took away my breath. My appetite was uncertain and I felt severe pains in the small of my back. I was under the doctor's care with strict instructions not to go out of the house but I remained on duty nevertheless. You would be surprised to know the amount of quinine I took; on some days it was as much as sixteen grains."

"And was Mr. Rickard badly off, too?"

"I should think he was. Why, time and again we have picked him up and laid him on the mantel, here in the vestibule, he was so used up."

"Yes," exclaimed Mr. Rickard, "I was so weak I could not rise after lying down without help, and could only walk with the aid of two canes, and then in a stooping position. Oh, we have been in a pretty bad condition here, all of us."

"And yet you are all the embodyment of health," said the writer, as he looked at the three bright and vigorous men before him.

"Oh, yes," said Mr. Rickard, "we have not known what sickness was for more than a year."

"Have you some secret way of overcoming malaria and its attendant horrors?"

"I think we have a most certain way," replied Colonel Densmore, "but it is no secret. You see, about two years ago my wife began to grow blind, and I was alarmed at her condition. She finally became so she could not tell whether a person were white or black at a distance of ten feet. One of her lady friends advised her to try a certain treatment that had done wonders for her, and to make a long story short, she did so and was completely cured. This induced me to try the same means for my own restoration and as soon as I found it was doing me good I recommended it to my associates and we have all been cured right here in the stronghold of malaria and kept in perfect health ever since by means of Warner's Safe Cure. Now I am not a believer in medicines in general, but I do not hesitate to say that I am satisfied I should have died of Bright's disease of the kidneys before this had it not been for this wonderful remedy. Indeed, I use it as a household medicine and give it to my children whenever they have any ailments."

"Yes," exclaimed Mr. Pendel, "I use it in my family all the while and have found it the most efficient remedy we have ever employed. I know of very many public men who are using it today and they all speak well of it."

"I weigh 160 pounds to-day" said Mr. Rickard, "and when my physicians told me over a year ago I could not hope to recover I weighed 122 pounds. Under such influences you cannot wonder that I consider this the best medicine before the American people."

The above statements from these gentlemen need no comments. They are voluntary and outspoken expressions from sources which are higher in the land. Were there the slighest question regarding their authenticity they would not be made public, but as they furnish such valuable truths for all who are suffering, we unhesitatingly publish them for the good of all.

NATHAN FORD'S NORTHWESTERN BUSINESS.

Knabe Pianos for Montana.

As an indication of the popularity and immense success of the Knabe Piano in the Northwest, and of the extended trade of Nathan Ford through the territory newly opened by the Northern Pacific, it is gratifying to mention the receipt of orders for three Knabe Pianos in one day for a single town in Montana. The previous shipment of pianos to various points in that Territory by Mr. Ford had given such satisfaction that the purchasers above mentioned ordered without hesitation direct from the house by correspondence. As is well known, this house positively guarantees satisfaction to all its patrons at whatever distance, and will at any time pay return charges on goods should they not prove satisfactory. This reputation and the quality of the goods handled are among the causes of its remarkable success.

Senator Edmunds' wealth is shown by a list furnished the assessors to be as follows: Personal property, $56,825; real property, $15,120; poll tax, $2; total tax, $721.45.

My father had an eating cancer for several years, which had eaten away his under lip and the inside of his cheek, down to the bottom of his gums. We got some of Swift's Specific and gave him, and the effect has been wonderful—almost miraculous. The sores are all healed, and he is perfectly well. Every one said it was only a question of time about his death, and his cure has created the greatest excitement in this part of the country. WM. B. LATHROP, South Easton, Mass., Jan. 7, 1884.

In the district court at Leavenworth Robert Davis, Mose Chambers and George Brown were found guilty of murder in the first degree for killing John Weigle March 1, 1883, and sentenced to death. Brown and Chambers both confessed complicity in the killing, which they said was done by Davis, and which was the most brutal in the history of the city. Davis and Chambers are both inmates of the penitentiary already, Davis for seven years and Chambers for ten.

Monday night, the 12th, incendiaries fired one of the finest brick blocks in Dallas, Tex., on Main street, between Lamar and Poydras, in which is located the Exchange bank, three large jewelry houses and several other fine business establishments. The upper stories are occupied by law offices, real estate firms, sleeping apartments, etc. Loss several thousand dollars. There is no clue to the incendiaries.

Seven Wise Men Baffled.

The N. Y. Morning Journal, says that Mrs. F. G. Kellogg, 50 E. 86th St., was partially paralyzed, and lay for seven days in convulsions. Physicians were engaged and discharged until seven had failed to help or cure her. She was unable to leave her bed, and was as helpless as a child. After using all sorts of salves, ointments, lotions and plasters, her case was given up as hopeless. She was induced to try St. Jacobs Oil as a last chance. She began to improve from the time the first application was made, and by its continued use, she has completely recovered.

It having been reported here that Col. John C. Spooner had retired from the directory of the Omaha railway, and had also resigned the office of general solicitor, a correspondent called upon him to get a corroboration or denial of the rumor. In response to the question as to whether he had resigned, he answered, that he had, and also that the immediate cause of my resignation is the commencement by the Omaha company of an action in New York against H. H. Porter, David Dows and R. P. Flower, to recover some $1,100,000 for alleged breach of duty by those gentlemen in distributing among the stockholders, in 1878, certain shares of the preferred stock of the Chicago, St. Paul & Minneapolis Railway company.

A Dangerous Case.

* * * ROCHESTER, June 1, 1882. "Ten years ago I was attacked with the most Intense and deathly pains in my back and —Kidneys

"Extending to the end of my toes and to my brain!

"Which made me delirious!

"From agony.

"It took three men to hold me on my bed at times!

"The doctors tried in vain to relieve me. But to no purpose.

"Morphine and other opiates

"Had no effect!

"After two months I was given up to die!

"When my wife heard a neighbor say what Hop Bitters had done for her, she at once got and gave me some. The first dose eased my brain and seemed to go hunting through my system for the pain.

"The second dose eased me so much that I slept two hours, something I had not done for two months. Before I had used five bottles, I was well and at work, as hard as any man could, for over three weeks; but I worked too hard for my strength, and taking a hard cold, I was taken with the most acute and painful rheumatism all through my system that was ever known. I called the doctors again, and after several weeks they left me a cripple on crutches for life, as they said. I met a friend and told him my case and he said Hop Bitters had cured him and would cure me. I poohed at him, but he was so earnest I was induced to use them again. In less than four weeks I threw away my crutches and went to work lightly and kept on using the Bitters for five weeks, until I became as well as any man living, and have been so for six years since. It also cured my wife who had been so for years; and has kept her and my children well and hearty with from two to three bottles per year. There is no need to be sick at all if these Bitters are used. J. J. BERK, Ex-Supervisor.

ST. JOHN'S EVE.

From Temple Bar.

Martha Holden was the prettiest maid in North Hants. Who shall gainsay it? But who am I to describe her?

"Aour Patty be vine enuff to be a lady born!" was the oftspoken thought of her father and mother—the one under gardener the other ex-laundry maid at the "Great House."

And, sure enough, Patty, according to the wiseacres, had for sometime been in a fair way to have her head turned by so many admirers.

A nod and a chuck under the chin from the young "squire;" and a "Waal, if she beant noo!" from John Brown the grizzled old earth stopper, as he saw her whisk across the court yard, were perhaps the highest and lowest graduations of admiration directly expressed. But even "The Squire" himself had been heard to say to "My Lady;" "Egad, Jane, that Holden girl is devilish pretty!" And every farmer and farmer's boy, whip and groom, keeper and poacher, within ten miles of the Great House, was worshipping, or had worshipped to his cost, at the shrine of Venus Sylvestris.

However, Patty was "going along" eighteen, and her little heart seemed as sound as a bell; her cheek was round and downy as a peach; her blue eyes glanced clear and honest through the dark lashes, and her whole demeanor defied the nost curious of gossips to say she had a thought other than to attend upon her young mistress.

But innocent as she looked—innocent as she really was—Patty, like most of the rest of womenkind, hugged to her own heart her little secret; and though scarce ten words had passed between them, she knew full well as he at the time our story opens, Christmas, 17—, that William Halfacre of Eversley, "Gypsy Will," as they used to call him, was her accepted lover.

Simple enough, and in this wise, had it come about.

One day in the August previous, North Hants had challenged South Hants to meet on the cricket field outside of the garden gates of the Great House; and Southampton and Lynhurst, Portsmouth and Winchester had mustered against Bramshill and Basingstroke, the Vine and High Clerc, to try their respective worths. No day was it then, as now, of white flannels and straw hats, fancy club ribbons, and silk waist handkerchiefs, of four balls an over, and lightning-paced round-arm bowing, done by gentlemanlike professional cricketers, who make their cool hundred, and lounge into the marquee for a cigarette and a claret cup. No. In black tweed broadcloth and white duck trousers, white frilled linen shirts, and tall black hats, did our heroes of the close of the ast century meet to "do each other to death" with slow and fast underhand bowling. And what need of a marquee was there on that field where each mighty linden of the avenue on one side, or massive oak along the church path, along the other side of the lawn, was in itself a tent for a regiment? What need of claret cup when the "old October" foamed in the Great House silver tankards under a holly bower presided over by the brewer thereof—the old family butler?

And among the heroes of the "willows" gathered round the group of oldsters gravely discussing in the centre of the field the merits of the wickets—how many runs it should be into the ditch, how many over, &c., &c.—stood Gypsy Will, the fastest bowler and hardest hitter in North Hants.

A second son of the favorite old tenant, the 'Squire' had a few years before given him a start on moorland farm—much too plodding a life for Will, who soon exchanged it for an underkeepership; whereat the numberless affrays with poachers kept excitement alive and stimulated his manhood into energy.

"Play" was at last called; and North and South Hants bowled and batted, ran and fielded, and when occasion came for it, ate and drank as if life depended on it. The rector kept the score, and cheered each good hit to the echo; and the old 'Squire made his padgroom lift him out of his low phaeton, standing under the lime trees, and deposit him in a big arm chair, with his gouty foot on a cushion, a little nearer the play, and even forgot to curse him for a clumsy fool, so exciting was the game.

At last the winning hit was made by Gypsy Will. But the day was not over yet, as ere the last cheers for the conquerers and conquered had died away, a fiddle and clarionet struck up a country dance, in which it was somehow fated that Martha Holden and Will Halfacre should "cross hands and down the middle"—a presage of what should follow.

Suffice it for the present, that as Patty walked back to the house with him an hour after, as the drowsy shard-beetle took the place of the bees in the lindens overhead, and she stole a look into Will's face and thought of his manliness and beauty, she loved him once and for all, and he looked down on her and loved in return.

But the lime-tree leaves began to turn and flicker down on the lawn, the bracken bronzed under the sun, the last red-heather blossom turned purple, mauve, and then brown, the puppies came home from walk, and cub hunting began—and still no sign from William.

November and the opening meet of the season brought its houseful of guests—its breakfast table set in the great hall, gay with pink, green and black coats, white breeches and boots—jangling on the stone floor—the hounds frolicking round the huntsmen on the lawn, save only one, old "Harbinger," the squire's pet, that was snoozing at the old man's knees inside—and brought for Patty its helter-skelter run with her young mistress along the grass ride to get before the rush of horsemen to the old summer house, where, encased in sturdy velveteen, gun on arm and retriever at heel, stood Gypsy Will.

The sign came! A bow and a blush for my young lady, a blush, a bow, a sudden drooping of the eyes for Patty. She was content, and repaid all three with interest, but no word yet.

The hunt is up. The "dappled dar[illegible] [illegible] through the [illegible] melody. The last [illegible] of the horn has died away in the dark bank of woods, but the [illegible] is lost to Patty [illegible] memory of those brown eyes that [illegible] may speak now that he has got his new cottage, and then she will be safe. But William is doomed not to speak; for on the night of the snowfall the Hartford Bridge boys swoop down on to the Squire's coverts, and handle Will so roughly, before the rest of the keepers and grooms can come to his rescue, that he is carried down on a hurdle to his father's cottage to be nursed for a month, leaving poor Patty doubly disconsolate for the loss of her lover, and for the knowledge that she is now more than ever at the young 'Squire's mercy. However, Christmas passes without any fresh encounter, and by careful keeping out of his way she manages to tide over the time till he goes to college again—not to be back till summer.

Easter comes round; a late Easter, but a bright Easter to Patty—for coming home from the village on Easter Eve, with some of the other servant maids, over the moor, at the head of the avenue stand, at first sight to the girl's terror, and then to their relief, two men—old Stratton, the head-keeper, and Will Halfacre—ready to pilot them safely through the darkness of the firs. And as the old man warms up into some keeper-Saga—now under that very tree some one had killed some one else that was deer stealing—William drops behind with Patty, and speaks!

Hoot! hoot! your warning to them, wise old owl! coursing through the trees! You know how hard it is to find food for two young ones in the old church tower at Eversley, and avoid keeper's traps! Yap! yap! your warning, crafty Mr. Fox! You too have your family cares, and rabbits are scarce and cubs are hungry! But the wisdom of the owl and the craft of the fox are unheeded; and the young couple live a lifetime of love in that short homeward walk.

Happy at last was Patty. But still a cloud hung over her little horizon. The wedding day was not to be till after midsummer—till after the pheasants' nesting season was well over, as till then Will would have to be up and out all night and every night; and "who knows," said he carelessly," that the Hartford Bridge boys mayn't pay us some more visits?"

May's thirty-one days were long to Patty, especially as the Hartford Bridge boys had one heavy brush with the keepers of the Great House, and then another, till Patty began to fear for her swain's life. An impulsive lover was Patty—having once loved, her love was her very life—and when the third brush came with the poachers the poor child was well-nigh wild. A month still of the pheasant season and the most dangerous of all—how could she survive it? What could she do to help him? Pray? She had prayed morning, noon, and night. Could she ask her young mistress to intercede with the Squire to get Will something else to do? No—she dare not. The 'Squire at that moment was red hot, externally and internally, with gout, and he had already given Will two chances. He would never give him another. What was to be done?

While she was rocking her poor little heart strings and brains to find some securer life for her beloved, one day there appeared at the hall door, where the old 'Squire was sitting in the warm south sun, watching the hounds exercising on the grass plot, the well-known face of Dinah Lee—the Mother-in-Israel of North Hants gypsies. Every one was kind to old Dinah; and the 'Squire, even, after cursing her and her tribe for sheep stealers, and goodness knows what else, chucked her a shilling, and sent her around to the buttery door, where, as luck would have it, she met Martha.

Of all people Dinah was the one Patty wished most to meet; for a story of her grandmother's had been running in her head for the last few weeks, to the effect that if "some one" did "something" on St. John's Eve, it would render him or his friends invisible. And ere Dinah could say a word Patty had drawn her into the buttery room, crossed her palm with a silver sixpence, and asked the result: which was simple enough, for Dinah had seen the cricket match nigh upon a year ago and——

"My pretty honey would marry a tall, dark man, but not till he had passed through many dangers even to the danger of death, from which he might or might not recover."

Too fluttered to see the incoherence of this prophesy, Patty then broached her more important question.

"Was there not some way Dinah could tell her that would make her lover invisible, so as to save him from all these dangers?"

"Yes;" but Dinah could not let out the secret to everybody. She was "poor, and had to live."

In a few moments the little hoard of money from Patty's box up stairs was in the old gypsy woman's hand, in answer to which came these directions:

"On St. John's Eve, between eleven o'clock and midnight, if you would find invisibility, take a platter of wood, and let there fall into it some seed of the king fern; which done in fasting and in silence, will insure you to walk both day and night, in heat or cold, rain and fire, without being seen."

"But where am I to find the king fern?"

"Ask your man, honey," was the only answer vouchsafed; and, to avoid further questioning, Dinah slipped away, deaf to all entreaties and even to the enticements of the larder.

On that same day Patty found out where the king fern grew, under the summer-house hill; and 'twas only the next that Will, unwitting of the purpose, and provided her with a specimen of the fern itself, a wooden platter, and a full description of where to gather more down in the damp shaughs.

Verily life seemed unbearable to Patty for the next few days, overwrought with fear for her lover. All the superstition of the old Southern Saxon blazed out in her, so that though Dinah had not absolutely said the fern seed would render Will invisible to the poachers, she had come to the conclusion that if she could gather it herself she could hover about him like a guardian angel and save him from harm. A doubt of the infallibility of Dinah's specific never entered into her mind.

Even the coming home of the young Squire toward the middle of June was of no import to her, though he was more ardently inclined than ever. Patty lived only for her lover, and ignored all else. Indeed, so pale and anxious she grew that every one noticed it, but with a set purpose before her, she looked not right nor left, except to make such love to the old housekeeper as should get her possession of the key of the door leading on to the terrace, whence she could easily go around by the corner of the bowling green into [illegible] morning seemed unending, the afternoon intolerable, and tea in the housekeeper's room oppressively weary.

As luck would have it, Patty's young mistress went to bed early that night. The lights in the lower suit of state rooms were put out at a little past ten, and 11 o'clock found Patty creeping on tip-toe down the staircase into the hall, through whose latticed windows the moon streamed in on to many a trophy of middle age armor—on sword and lance, Puritan leather jerkin, pike and matchlock—and trophies of flood and field—from the last red deer head that graced the chase nigh three hundred years ago, to the mask of the last gallant fox that had died before the hounds in February.

Nervously she unlocked the door and stepped out into the intense black shadow of the Great House. Beyond the terrace the home grass park was a blaze of moonlight up to the Great Oak, beyond which the broken edges of bracken and bramble, thorn and mountain ash were shadowed in with mighty blue-black pines.

But there is no time to stay, and keeping in the shadow. Patty flits along the terrace, through the arched gallery door under which the grand court ladies of former days had sipped their chocolate with Lady Zouch, and gossiped while the men were playing troco on the bowling green outside. Across this to the little arbor Patty steals like a hunted hare, conscious that there is the only dangerous spot. A moment more she has passed the arbor, clambered over the little stone parapet, and, without waiting to think of its depth, has jumped into the moat surrounding the terrace.

Here, she pauses to listen; but no sound, nor sign, save the bleat of the sheep and whinney of the colts in the grass park, and the quick palpitations of her own heart.

Little did she suspect that within fifteen feet of her in the arbor, crushing down his wonder and excitement, sat the young squire, who, to avoid parental objection, was enjoying his evening Havana under the moonlight; and who had half recognized in the black-cloaked figure flitting past the arbor Patty Holden, the girl of all others he most wished to have a word with.

Where could she be going? To see whom? were the questions that puzzled him. To see some relation or sick friend, she would have openly asked for leave or for an escort. No. This pointed to some clandestine meeting, the which he would take steps to see, and by taxing her with it turn it to his own profit.

As Patty's footfall died away on the soft turf, the young 'Squire slipped out of the arbor, and, vaulting over the railing, dropped into the shadow to follow her footsteps so soon as she should be fairly hidden in the Lime avenue.

The Lime avenue! How sombre it seemed to poor Patty, heedless of the scent of the last few blossoms dying upon the night—of the great moths that swooped and fluttered in and out. She saw only a roof of foliage arching in a great shadow, the gray and grisly stems, and the glare of the moonlight outside, into which she longed but dared not to step. Any one from the house, or some of the men coming home, might see her there; while in the gloom she was safe from all save the dread of nameless "something" stepping out and confronting her from behind every tree-trunk.

The end of the Lime avenue is reached, and the Winchfield road crossing her path at right angles gleams white in the moonlight—the crossing sentinelled by four giant silver pines, from whose lordly tops a single jackdaw begins to chatter as he sees her, and as the whole roost take up the cry, she shrinks back in terror against the stem of the last linden.

But it is too late to go back now. Will's life—her own—depends on the success of her venture. The long grass moonlit ride, fringed with heather and marked with scattering firs, would soon give place to the darker forest, in which there would be more safety; and after a moment's hurried prayer, she sped wildly up the ride amid a chattering volley from the jackdaws. The great silver fir—scarred and scored from crest to boll by lightning, the wonder of her childhood—is passed, and many another noble landmark of the chase, till she stops at last on the edge of the thicker forest under the shade of the well-known Deformed Scotch Fir, which, unable through some youthful injury to rear a head as proudly as his brothers on either side, had perversely grown outward and downward till it has formed a bower fit for the Fir Maiden herself.

As soon as the excitement of movement had passed, a deadly fear of impending evil came over Patty; but the brave little spirit would not quail; and out again only to shrink back with a cry, as through the pines overhead, with every undulating motion, there swept a broken sheet of white twenty feet square, and then silently faded into the distance. Poor child! little did she deem, as she cowered under the fir branches, that the same sheet which had scared many a one before, and should many a one afterward, was only a herd of swans wending their nightly way from Dogamesfield to Bramshill—from Bramshill great pond to the Lodden at Swallowfield. But to Patty, as to others, it was a veritable moving apparition of the ghost and body of her childhood; and long it was ere she could muster courage for another start. She could but die; and what if she did die for Will's sake? Better that than have him killed and leave her desolate. Then, fancy, if she was successful if she reached the fern seed, gathered it and gave it to him, so that he would henceforth walk invisible among the poachers! For that meant absolute safety.

Yes! up and on! till the pine needles crisped under her tread.

With an occasional start, as a night-jar swoops into her path in pursuit of a moth, a rabbit scuttles into the fern, or a flock of snipe wails across from the moor down to the gleaming reaches of the river below, at length she emerges from the forest on to a chine, on the further end of which glints white the summer house. On either side the hill slopes down abruptly, covered in with bracken.

It is not, however, to the right, where far below the thorn bushes rise in the dell, but to the left she looks, anxiously, where the gleaming stems of the silver birches mark the boggy stream by which grows the king fern. She can hear the dogs at the keeper's, half a mile away, break out into answering tongue as a fox sullies the stillness with a querulous bark, which reminds her that she is standing out in the open moonlight, where some of the keepers or watchers may see her. So she plunges down the little moor path, and disappearing in overarching fronds of bracken is lost to sight to the young 'Squire' who, more and more puzzled with her manœuvres, has almost made up his mind to betray himself. But, perhaps, this dell may tell its tale; and cautiously he too dives down into the bracken, and is lost to sight to a third person—Gypsy Will himself, gun on shoulder, who, unknown to either of the others, has been keeping pace with them through the firs to the left—a more puzzled spectator than even the young 'Squire.

The young 'Squire he had known at once, but Patty was not so easily recognized, nor the reason for her being there and being followed.

There must be something wrong about this. And he, too, disappeared under the green blanket of fern, converging so as to meet the other two at the bottom of the dell.

Not twenty yards apart do the two men reach it, and twenty yards ahead of them on the tinkling moor-stream side, hedged in with silver birch stems stands Patty Holden in the moonlight, shaking into her platter a giant frond of Osmunda Regalis that towers above her head, while her face shames the very moon in paleness; and the two men see her hole form quivering with emotion.

The young 'Squire first recovered his sang froid, and jauntily stepped out from the shadow with a "Hullo! little Patty!"

The girl's wild shriek as he stepped forward to put his arm round her roused all the slumbering devil in Will's heart, and, clubbing his gun, he sprang forward.

The 'Squire's sword was out in a second, and, ere the gun stock descended, was through Will's left arm; nevertheless, the blow fell fair on to the young man's shoulder, crusing him senseless to the earth.

About two months afterwards, the door of a cell in Winchester jail opened, and a keeper said to its inmate. "Will Halfacre, you're in luck! The young 'Squire of Branshill is better, and instead of proceeding against you, they have withdrawn all charges; and here's Patty Holden brought the warrant for your release."

In another moment Patty was nestling in his bosom, and telling in disjointed sentences how the young 'Squire had said it was all his own fault, and how he had frankly forgiven; and how the old 'Squire, though he could not keep Will on the place, had got him a headkeepership in Herffordshire, and that he was to go there immediately; and how she loved him, and that they were to get married at once, and that she'd tell him how she got his release by and by, and twenty other things—all of which Will quite forgot in his bewilderment. And to the day of his death he never remembered rightly what passed at Winchester jail, except that he got out, and that Patty there and then extracted a promise from him that he should never refer to the subject of picking fern seed on St. John's Eve.

Individualities.

We shall not be willing to acknowledge Mr. G. W. Curtis the greatest living American orator until we hear again from Congressman Warner, of Tennessee, who in a recent speech alluded to Liberty as a "lovely babe perched upon the Nation's brow."

President Porter, of Yale College, receives for his services about $4,000 a year. The professors receive about $3,500 and the tutors from $1,200 to $2,500. Harvard tutors are paid $1,000, while most of the professors get $4,000 and some $5,000.

Bjornstern, the Norwegian poet, has left Paris to take his trial with the other liberal editors of Norway who are being prosecuted by the King. The King and he are enemies since the day when the poet challenged the King to mortal combat and was contemptuously refused.

Olive Logan writes that Mrs. Victoria Woodhull is married to John Randolph Martin, a rich London banker, "and any fine day you can see the pleased and amiable face of the now Mrs. Martin side by side with her faithful sister, Tennie C. Claflin, as they sit together in their comfortable carriage and roll toward their splendid residence in Courtfield Gardens over the smooth avenues of lovely Hyde Park."

When Senator Palmer, of Michigan, goes to New York and stops at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, he always carries a loaf of Graham bread in his satchel. Before going to his meals he cuts a couple of slices from the loaf and puts them in his pocket. At the table he pulls the bread out, and has always something before him he can eat. In his house at Detroit he has a mill constructed on purpose to grind this bread, and at home he will never eat bread made from flour ground at any other mill.

Talking once with General Sherman, the Rev. James Freeman Clarke said: "Oh, general, there is something I want to ask you; something I ought to know." "Well, what is it?" inquired the general. "I don't know," said the other; "I can't think what it is, but I am sure there is something you know that I don't know, and I ought not to let so good an opportunity of asking it go by unimproved." But it did go by.

It is stated that the late Charles Reade has not left more than about £20,000, the bulk of which goes to his godson, Mr. Charles Liston. To his brother the testator leaves the house at Blomfield-villas, Shepherd's-bush, and £300 a year; to his nephew, Major Reade, £1,000; to his nieces £800 each; to the Rev. Compton Reade (the testator's eldest nephew), £200; after the death of the testator's brother the annuity of £300 a year left to him reverts to the Rev. Compton Reade and the testator's two nieces—£100 per annum each.

Ruskin is sixty-five years old, but is said to act like a man of forty-five. He is not more than five feet five inches in height. Indeed, he is petit. His complexion originally was probably fair, though now his face pretty nearly up to the eyes is covered with an iron-gray beard; the abundant hair is unconventionally long, and though he is personally neat and "trim," his hair seems to have had no recent speaking acquaintance with a brush. The forehead is low and retreating; the eyes gray and sparkling—quizzing and mischievous.

New York is the centre of the cigar-making trade. She has nearly 4,000 factories, and turns out 1,000,000,000 cigars a year. Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois rank after New York. There were made in this country last year 3,177,860,952 cigars, about forty for every pound of tobacco used. About 85,000,000 were imported, thus making a total of about 3,150,000 or sixty for every man, woman and child in the United States, and 250 for every man over 21 years of age.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Household Notes.

Violets naturally grow in a moist soil, but the white and blue violets will do well with cultivation in good garden soil. The yellow variety is more wild in its habits, inclined to grow in the woods along rocky streams, and might do well around a shade tree or in the house. These wild flowers and others can be added to the common garden pets and make a pleasing variety at no expense.

Soft Soap should be kept in a dry place in a cellar, and should not be used till three months old.

FOOD FOR DYSPEPTICS.—A member of my family was incapable for months of retaining any food except beef, slightly broiled, and only a small portion of this could be eaten, but at short intervals. After a while the crust of stale bread could be digested. One person told us that he could eat nothing but parched corn pounded; another whole wheat, boiled the entire day. Neither agreed with our patient, but when early apples ripened, they were freely eaten and digested. All other fruits followed gradually, pears last, and now the dyspeptic apparently has as sound a stomach as ever. The patient should remain out doors as much as possible.—Country Gentleman.

HOUSE CLEANING.—Painted walls may be cleaned easily on cold days by creating sufficient steam in the room to thoroughly wet the walls, then washing them quickly with weak suds. Kerosene may be applied with a feather to the edge of a room where the carpet is not to be taken up, without injuring the carpet, but causing great discomfort to moths that wish to invade the room, either killing them or driving them back.

OLIVE STUFFING.—If poultry is intended to be eaten cold, stuff it with olives, without removing the stones. The flavor will be delicious, and, indeed, the odor as well.

New table mats are made of Lincrusta-Walton, which looks like stamped leather. They are very effective. The gilded wicker mats are also used. Gilt and china fruit dishes are now frequently placed on little red velvet stands.

Instead of curtains for a hall window a lattice screen is arranged, either of gilt metal or of fine carved wood, upon which are trained fast growing leaf vines, whose leaves soften the light, as stained glass does not do, with coolest effect.

Choice Farming Condensations.

Young sows that are to come in should be put in the best possible condition. A young sow not fully matured is still in a growing condition, and as she must provide growth for her embryo litter as well as herself she must not only be fed with a view of being kept in good condition, but must be made comfortable in every other respect, as the care of the little after birth is a greater tax upon her than would be the case where she an old sow.

To get rid of the cabbage-worm I have successfully used butter milk and water the last two years—about one-third of the former to two-thirds of the latter. My cabbages were also badly infested with lice, but two applications freed them completely. The brown and yellow stripped bug, the great pest to cucumber and water-mellon vines, will do no damage if the vines are occasionally sprinkled with the mixture; but I think they require sprinkling oftener and with a stronger solution of butter milk than the cabbage.

The true inwardness of the opposition to the trade in western slaughtered beef seems to be that the railroads have a large interest in continuing the present system of live stock shipment, with all its barbarities. The feeding of the stock is one of the perquisites of the railroads, and is very profitable, hay costing $8 per ton being charged to the shipper at $50. Besides, two car-loads of live cattle can be put into one car when slaughtered, at a reduction of one-half the freight; and so a cry is raised that western slaughtered beef is unwholesome; that diseased cattle are killed for beef, that could not be sent forward alive, and that the gases used in the process of refrigerating injure the meat. Truly, we may say with old Jack Falstaff, "Lord! how men are given to lying!"

Farmers do not consider the profit there is in rearing horses for sale; a 1200 pound horse will sell in the market for $250, or about 20 cents a pound live weight. At three years a horse is earning his feed and paying back for his previous cost. At five years his work has left him out of debt, and if sold for $250, this is clear profit. Compared with a three-year-old steer weighing 1200 pounds, and selling for six cents per pound live weight, the horse shows an exceedingly greater profit. Maine farmers always had a reputation for shrewdness, and when the agricultural reports from that state show a large increase in the business of rearing horses, for sale in the Boston market, it shows the reputation is not got undeservedly.

A New-Englander says he has lived a poor man forty years and grown prematurely old on a stony farm, some of the objections to which he names in The Manchester Mirror:

"If one has to clear the land of stone, the cost will generally be more per acre than the price of the land, and on many farms, after the surface stones are removed, it will be necessary to pick off the loose stones after each ploughing. The land is lowered by the stones removed so that the plough runs deeper, and by the action of frost the stones are constantly rising to the surface. Such lands are more expensive to plough and to cultivate, wearing out more tools and requiring more time and strength. On such lands at least double the amount of labor is required."

A well-known Illinoisian reports as a fact that $100 will just now buy 1,000 bushels of potatoes in Illinois. At this price it will pay to feed potatoes to stock of all kinds. A few are exceedingly useful to horses, and especially to those suffering from heaves or broken wind. When potatoes are fed to cows the tubers should be boiled, by which any irritation to the bowels from indigested starch granules is avoided. Raw potatoes will effect the flavor of milk, and of course that of butter, but boiled potatoes, fed cold, are easily digested, and if mixed with a little bran and lightly salted, are very palatable, and nutricious. Potatoes contain 20 per cent. of starch; corn contains 60 per cent; then if corn is worth 50 cents a bushel, potatoes are worth about 17 cents a bushel to feed. But they are worth 10 cents a bushel more for their wholesomeness and the aid they give to the digestion of hay and corn meal.

How I Raise Asparagus.

I did no trenching with the spade, but I ploughed the ground as deep as possible, running twice in the same furrow. I manured heavily with barnyard manure both before and after ploughing. After harrowing, I marked the rows four feet apart with the plough, running several times in the same place and throwing the dirt each way. Then I raked the dirt from the bottom of the furrow with the hoe and placed the plants two feet apart in the row and covered them. The plants were from a seeding bed of my own, two years old. I cut the roots quite short and spread them out each way. Should I plant again I would set the plants four feet by four, with the crowns four to six inches below the surface. Less than four inches is too shallow; there will be many small and worthless shoots. We cut some a year after planting, and for more than a dozen years we have kept the patch cut clear till near the last of June. Then we let asparagus and foxtail, if any, grow. Nothing more is done till the ground is dry the next spring. Then we cover the patch thickly with straw, which we have in plenty, and burn up straw, stalks, and seeds together. Then we harrow thoroughly, mixing the ashes with the top soil. Then we apply a covering of barnyard manure, and harrow again. We are now ready to market asparagus as soon as it starts. The only cultivation it gets is a good harrowing with a two-horse harrow a few times during the season, whenever the weeds and grass begin to start a little. The harrowing is done immediately after cutting for market; always the same day. There is very little harm done. The stools are very broad, and our crop better every year. I never have used any salt or commercial fertilizer. Is there a cheaper and better way to raise asparagus on a large scale?—J. W. Boxwell, Washington Co., Minn.

The Best Potato.

Rural New Yorker.

"Which is the best potato to plant?" Every "potato man" or seed dealer has been asked this question a hundred times in every planting season, and tried to answer it correctly just as often! All have generally been quite ready to recommend their respective favorites, whatever they may have been—Snowflake or Ohio, Beauty of Hebron or Sunrise, Blush, Wall's Orange or White Elephant. I have made up my mind to be more cautious in future, for until we come across another Early Rose, it will never do to recommend any particular kind without reserve; and the equal of the Early Rose has not, as yet, turned up. Each variety of potato seems to thrive best under certain conditions of soil and climate; every soil and locality are best adapted to a certain variety, or certain varieties. Each can be helped but little by other people's advice. Every man must try for himself. Let each grower make a selection of the most promising varieties, among which I include the Early Ohio and Beauty of Hebron for early; the Burbank, White Star, White Elephant, and prehaps the O. K. Mammoth Prolific, for late. Let him buy and plant a small quantity, say a peck or so, of each, and he will soon find out which is the variety or varieties for his particular soil and climate.

Milking Cows:

I think the value of proper milking is very much under-rated; people milk at all times and in a variety of ways. I do not believe in cow bails, perhaps from the reason that I have become accustomed to the Somerset span; of course, cows sufficiently quiet require neither. Perhaps a brief description of the span may be useful to some readers: Take a piece of rope about the size of your little finger and three feet six inches long, make a spliced loop at one end and a knot at the other, which you can just pass through it—a good-sized knot is best. To use it, put it around the off leg of the cow (the off side of a cow is the near side of a horse) and about the middle of the rope; now twist the two ends of the rope together till there is enough to go round the near leg, then place the knot through the loop and you have the span on. You will find it as effectual as hobbies on a horse. In milking, moisten the teats with water, and squeeze with the full hand, instead of pulling down with the finger and thumb, which is called "stripping," taking particular care not to put the fingers all round the teats, but to bring the ends of the fingers directly upon the milk vains. By milking thus the cow gradually becomes easier to milk, and the strain upon the wrists is very much lessned. Care should be taken to milk in this way as long as any milk comes, and "stripping" should be the last resort. Milkers would do well to remember that the faster a cow is milked the more milk she yields, and the milk which comes last is the richest.—Hints by "Practical.

Nothing is more honorable and pleasant than civility, and nothing more ridiculous and burdensome than ceremony. Civility teaches us to behave with proportionate respect to everyone, according as their rank requires, and their merit demands. In other words, civility is the science of men of the word. A person of good address, who conducts herself with due circumspection, conciliates the love and esteem of society, because everyone finds herself at ease in her company; but a ceremonious woman is the plague of her acquaintance. Such a one requires too much attention to be a pleasant associate; is too seldom satisfied with what is paid her, and every moment feels her pride hurt by the want of some frivolous etiquette. You cannot be too formal to her, nor can she dispense with her formalities to others.

Teaching Girls How to Cook.

There comes a time in every little girl's life when she is seized with a longing to cook; by all means indulge her. Do not wait until she is a young lady and then send her to a cooking school to learn how to make a pudding or cake—what she might have learned in the kitchen at home; and been happy in learning. A neighbor of mine who put this theory in practice presented me with a plate of cookies made by her daughter of five; they would have been creditable to a much older cook. The child faithfully and delightedly followed her mother's instructions. If some older member of the family superintends, but does not lend a helping hand, a good deal of valuable knowledge will be acquired in this way. Let them begin with something very simple; try, for instance, this rule for crackers; To three pints of flour put one teaspoonful of soda, dissolve in sour milk; melt a tablespoonful of butter or of butter and lard mixed; make the dough very stiff; roll it very thin; bake slowly.—New York Post.

How to Treat Corpulency.

Whatever we have written in reference to the means to be employed for reducing obesity has always contained a caution against carrying our remedies to extremes. The golden rule of "moderation in all things" applies with especial force to this subject, since errors in method of accomplishing the desired result may involve the sacrifice of the patient. A strict adherence to the rules published by "Banting" are certain to reduce corpulency, and at the same time to impair, if not destroy the health. It requires a wonderful amount of patience to remain contented while watching the slow processes of mild but safe remedies for the cure of obesity, knowing that there is a shorter, even if more dangerous, path that might be pursued. But if the sufferer from corpulency is not satisfied with slow results, he had better not attempt the treatment. Deprived of all technical terms and obscure theories, a super-abundance of fat is produced by eating more than is required for the legitimate wants of the system, and particularly of sugar and starchy substances, as potatoes and wheat bread. It has been proved—contrary to the general belief on this subject—that eating fat in moderation does not produce fat. Professor Ebstein of Goettingen, Germany, has given this subject a thorough scientific investigation; and he claims that the treatment of corpulency by regulating the diet hardly involves any great self-denial on the part of the patient. He allows a rather attractive bill of fare, with a variety of dishes, but positively and for ever excludes potatoes, and limits the quantity of bread. For breakfast he allows one cup of black tea without milk or sugar; about two ounces of white or brown bread and plenty of butter. Dinner—Soup (with bone marrow occasionally), five or six ounces of meat, boiled or stewed, with fat gravy; especially fat meat, plenty of vegetables, cabbage, and most of all, legumes (peas, beans). Beets, carrots and turnips are, on account of the sugar they contain, almost totally excluded—potatoes entirely. After dinner, a little fresh fruit, but without sugar. Supper—Tea without sugar or milk, one egg or a little fat meat, or both; or some ham, with its fat, sausage, smoked or fresh fish, two ounces of white bread with plenty of butter, and occasionally a little cheese and a little fresh fruit. A persistence in this plan for a few months, we are assured, will reduce corpulency; but there must be no going back to old habits, or the trouble will return. This bill of fare or a similar one must be maintained during life.—Hall's Journal of Health.

THE STORY OF A WELL.

Why the Prospector Failed to Strike the Oil.

"I'm discouraged, I am," said a tired and seedy looking passenger to a Chicago Herald gossipper, as he lopped into a seat and pulled his hat down over his eyes. "What's the matter? Haven't you done well out west?" "Done well? Yes, we did a well, if that's what you mean." "Explain yourself." "Why, my partner and me had a couple of thousand ahead, when we struck a place out in southwestern Missouri, where there were indications of oil. My pard used to work up in the oil regions, and he said he knew there was oil down there. So we sent for a drilling machine and went to work. After we'd got down 900 feet, and pretty near the bottom of our pile, too, I give up. So did my pard. 'But Jim,' says he, he says, 'we've got our money in this hole, now ler's get it out.' The result was he sold a piece of land in Iowa and I took some of my wife's money. We went down east and bought a carload of oil and a lot of empties and had the whole lot billed as empty barrels. 'Bout a week afore the oil was due, we gave out that we was about to strike it, and sent for a car load of empty oil barrels to fill. The load come and was full to the roof of the car, the top barrels only being empty. There was big excitement in that neighborhood, but no one suspected what we were at. So that night my pard an' I an' two hired men we'd let into the secret worked like beavers pouring that carload of oil down the hole. It took us from midnight to near daylight, the hardest kind of work. Then we all went to bed, but crawled out in a couple hours, and when the crowd had collected started up our little pump. I was so happy that mornin' I could have flied, as I expected before night we'd sell the hole for a least $50,000. Well, as I said, we started up the pump with a big crowd around. Here the tired and seedy passengers paused, but was pressed to go on. With a sigh he resumed: "It makes me so all-fired mad just to think of it," he said, "that I can hardly talk. But, would you believe it, nary a drop of oil could we pump from that hole. Every gill of it had run off in the ground. That hole was as dry as—as I am now. This," he concluded, as he handed the flask back to the kind-hearted drummer, who had passed it, "is how I have done well in he West."

No Need to Drown.

From the New York Sun.

"I always dread the return of the season when sea bathing is indulged in," said a gentleman recently. "My family have had several narrow escapes and still they have a perfect mania for the water."

"Why there is no need to be afraid," answered his friend, "if you but retain your presence of mind. When you find yourself in deep water, you will sink at first, but if you do not struggle you will come quickly to the surface again. On reaching it immediately draw a full breath and throw your head back. This will have the effect of placing you in a recumbent position on the surface of the water. Now this is the most critical moment for those who do not know what to do next. Extend your arms at once on a level with your shoulders, with the palms of the hands downward, and begin gently paddling in the water with the movement of the wrist only. Extend your legs quietly and slowly in a line with your body. If you raise your arms, your head or your legs above the surface of the water you will sink, but if you have presence of mind not to do so and not to struggle about, you will never sink, so long as you keep paddling gently without exertion. So you may float on until you are picked up, or until you are numbed by the cold."

UNION LAKE NEWS.

UNION LAKE, May 19, 1884.

A fire brigade would be in order just new, as we who live in town 148, R. 43, (and also R. 42) are just now on the lookout. On the 15th inst. Mr. R. Knowls set a pile of dry brush on fire and the wind spread the flames so that the fire was soon beyond his control, and had it it not been for the timely and prompt action of Mr. Chas. Crossman and Wm. and Samuel Dunfee, who went to the rescue, the saw mill and lumber yard of Daniel Cameron would undoubtedly have been reduced to ashes. The next day a Norwegian living on the north side of Crystal Lake set fire to a marsh with the intention of burning the old grass, which was done, but the fire spread south, and getting beyond his control, it required the united efforts of Mr. C. Snyder, T. J. West and Chas. and George West to keep Robert Finnesy's house and stable from the devouring element. On the same day the house of Mr. Chas. Easterly with his bed clothing, overcoat, dishes, stove, &c., was consumed by a fire coming from Sec, 18, T. 148, R. 42, On the night on the 17th the houses of C. Churchill and Dr. A. A. Just narrowly escaped a baptism of fire, and would no doubt have been consumed had not Bert Wells and Mr. Green exercises a watchful care over it during the night. Now, we do not want any one to think we are grumbling or fault-finding, but when a man has put in one week running from place to place through the woods with a rake or hoe in one hand and a pail of water in the other, nay, more than that, having to get out of bed at midnight to fight fire on account of other people's stupidity or wilful carelessness, then we object, and if there is a law in Minnesota to protect a man's premises from incendiaryism, it should be enforced, as there has been hundreds of acres of valuable timber damaged badly by the fires of the past week.

Facts Concerning Drainage.

The subject of drainage in our county has received considerable attention during the past two years, and those localities where ditching has been carefully conducted, the most flattering results have been obtained. In other places mistakes have been made, and the proper authorities will proceed to rectify the same, not without incurring an additional expense, however, which will make the whole cost much greater than if properly constructed in the first place. This reference is made more particularly to those conducted by the townships, and there are instances in which but little benefit has been derived, owing principally to a lack of knowledge as to proper methods and a failure to deepen the ditches in some of the highest portions. It is generally conceded that there is but a small portion of Polk County but what could be benefitted by drainage, the degree of benefit in a very large portion being such as would raise comparatively worthless sections at the present time, to valuable farming land; the cost of the ditching being but as a mite compared with the increased valuation. In nearly all sections a very laudable desire is to get as much work done as is possible for a stated sum. They proceed at once to grade their roads and open their ditches with only a guess-work knowledge as to the general slope of the country, and the comparative difference between the ridges and slopes, which is certainly mistaken economy; for, although in most cases a very good highway is opened, the ditches often fail to perform the sought for uses, acting more as reservoirs than drains. The subject of civil engineering as connected with drainage does not receive near the attention to which it is entitled. The cost of having drains properly leveled and graded accordingly, is very small in comparison with the value of their increased usefulness. A very poor economy is the system of letting jobs or contracts for work, the ditches to be of uniform depth and width throughout, for it is well known that the difference between the high and low places often greatly exceeds two feet, especially the lands bordering on the rivers and ravines. In some localities additional work has been done on some of these ridges but even then, others quite or nearly as important have been neglected, simply because they looked low enough, thus destroying the general utility of the extra work already performed. The reason advanced in most instances is that the work is for good roads, but experiment has shown they may be obtained and still have properly ditches without additional cost. The [illegible] to secure a good road in connection with drainage, and should some places be very low and wet, such deviation can readily be made from an exact grade line as will produce material for the same and still not detract from the usefulness of the ditches. Another common error is that of attempting to grade a large number of lines in a township during a season. The principal of grading well, a few main lines, putting in large and well leveled ditches is far more beneficial to the best interests of the immediate vacinity than that of distributing the work on so many lines.

THE MINSTRELS.

Fargo Argus.

A large and enthusiastic audience greeted Hi Henry's Minstrels at the Opera House last night, filling nearly every seat in the house, and they were amply repaid by the select and first class entertainment which was presented. The music, singing and dancing were much above the average of minstrel shows. Mr. Henry has made a selection of the stars in that profession that does him much credit. Everyone was good in all their parts, no tricks as is usually the case with negro minstrels.

Especial mention is desired of the singing of the "Muldoon Quartotte" which was fine, the voices blending with each other in perfect unison. The first part opening was new and handsomely set during which the operatic overture was given and received with applause. The introduction of the "Gobble Song" made a hit.

It would be impossible to do justice to all the acts, as they have to be seen, to be appreciated.

Hi Henry's cornet solos reached the hearts of his hearers. Mr. Henry is without doubt at the top round of the ladder as a cornet alto artist. His variations of the "Last Rose of Summer" showed that he was a master of the cornet.

Mr. Lyon's make up as a young lady was excellent, as was also Mr. Bower's stump speech.

The song and dance carnival and clog tournament was fine. Taking it all together, it is one of the best minstrel shows that ever visited Fargo, and their reputation will draw full houses when ever they return.

The band created quite a sensation on the streets, and is pronounced the finest band ever seen in Fargo.

D. eighteen hundred and eighty-two and recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the seventeenth day of November A. D. 1882, at 8 o'clock a. m., in book "I" of mortgages, on pages 499 to 501, on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the amount of $30.75, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, at public auction, by the Sheriff of said county, on Saturday the 7th day of June A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-four, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

[First publication April 24th, 1884.]

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN the conditions of a certain mortgage, executed and delivered by Timothy O. Sullyvan, a single man, mortgagor, to T. L. Smedes, mortgagee, dated the twenty-seventh day of March in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, and recorded as a mortgage, together with the power of sale therein contained, in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the twenty-seventh day of March A. D. 1882, at 4:15 o'clock p. m., in book "F" of mortgages, on pages 276, 277 and 278, which said mortgage authorized the holder thereof, in case of said default, to declare due and foreclose the same for the whole amount secured to be paid thereby, and whereas, there is claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice the amount of seven hundred and twenty-eight and 25-100 dollars being the whole amount secured to be paid thereby, and still unpaid, and twenty-seven and 10-100 dollars taxes paid by mortgagee and no action or proceeding has been instituted, at law, or in equity, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, and whereas, by such default, the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of such power of sale contained in, and recorded with said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, at public auction by the Sheriff of said County, or by his deputy, of the County, on Tuesday the [illegible] day of June A. The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold are the lot, piece or parcel of land [illegible] in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota [illegible]

CROOKSTON.

The Coming City of The Red River Valley.

What a correspondent of the Minneapolis Tribune thinks of Crookston.

A moderate amount of new buildings in course of erection, were noticed at the various towns, but at Crookston where I stopped for a day, I found more than ordinary activity, not in sales of property for speculation, but in the way of prominent and actual improvement. It is estimated that last season the amount expended in buildings and manufacturing improvements reached the respectable figure of $600,000. This included the flouring mills, with a grinding capacity of 500 barrels per day. This season's improvements is headed by T. B. Walker's mammoth saw mill, capacity 25,000,000 feet that will cost when completed over one hundred thousand dollars. It is expected to see the big wheel start early in June. Another saw mill is contemplated, with even greater capacity, this season. The reader may be curious to know where the logs to feed these mills are to come from. If so, he is referred to the map and requested to follow the Red Lake River from Crookston eastward to Red Lake, and the tributaries of Red Lake River. "Pine men" can give specific information on this subject.

Crookston undoubtedly holds the key to the entire lumber interests and all that implies in the Red River Valley, besides having the greatest water power next to Fergus Falls—in fact the only water power in the Red River Valley—add to this the fact that Polk County, of which Crookston is the county seat, is the banner county in the valley, and you have it all in a nut shell. Crookston has never been blessed with a large number of additions, but this spring South Crookston is brought out by the Crookston Improvment Company and will probably become a favorite for residence locations, lying high on a beautiful elevation, with the river circling it on three sides, with natural groves and heavy timber, a general natural park, accessible by two bridges across the river and within five minute's walk of the postoffice. The Crookston Improvment Company had the satisfaction last season to see nearly a hundred buildings adorn their Woodland Park addition and the outlook for South Crookston is most encouraging, but the chief secret is that there is method in their madness. They take the lead in all matters of improvments, literally taking their own medicine. An impartial observation cannot fail to impress any one with the conviction that Crookston has a healthy prosperous future, and the natural advantages with which the city is liberally endowed are being carefully utilized and developed in the hands of enterprising people, and while the progress for a time may be considered slow, it will be the more substantial. The Crookston people are now, so to speak, laying the foundations, and they are fully aware how important a factor, this is to the superstructure. The present prospects for the Red River Valley, considering everything, is encouraging, and point to a bountiful harvest." GRANGER.

Speaking of roads and ditches, the Fargo Argus says:

"In the convention of the county commissioners yesterday the committee on roads and drainage reported in favor of substituting for the Dakota law something similar to one passed by the legislature of Minnesota last year, for the benefit of half a dozen Red River counties in the north. The Dakota statute has proved to be too complicated and difficult to comply with in all its obscure or uncertain details. The members of the convention from Grand Forks and other counties north, report almost incredible results in many towns from the use of the New Era grader, in making roads and ditching. In districts where the country is low and in former years the roads were impassable at times, and rarely in good order, a remarkable change has been effected, and those districts have become noted for having good roads, never impassable, and the land adjacent could be tilled weeks earlier. In Grand Forks it is said the streets have been kept in excellent condition, at no time impassable as in former years. There is probably no subject before the commissioners of more practical moment than this, especially in the Red River Valley. Drainage and good roads are the great needs of the country."

The American Agriculturist for June, 1884. is another convincing proof that this journal feeds the world with the best thoughts on all farm, garden, and household subjects. It contains over one hundred and twenty-five seasonable, instructive, original articles, with nearly as many engravings of of labor-saving devices, new plants, economical and common-sense methods, etc., etc. Among well-known writers are: A. S. Fuller, Dr. Geo. Thurber, Col. M. C. Weld, Prof. S. R. Thompson, Dr. B. D. Halsted, Henry Stewart, Dr. D. D. Slade, Alfred Trumble, Prof. J. P. Roberts, R. B. Roosevelt, Col. F. D. Curtis, W. S. Hutchinson, Agnes (Carr) Sage, Ethel Stone, and a score of others. All readers, and especially the young, will be pleased to see the liberal offer for short juvenile stories, which bespeaks a still greater richness and variety for the boy's and girl's columns. Every department of the June issue is brimful of the best instructive reading. Published by the Orange Judd Co., 751 Broadway, N. Y. Price, $1,50 per year; single number, 15 cents.

The Democratic convention was held in Fortiers Hall last Saturday. Ed. N. Wile Chairman, F. J. Rothpletz Sec. Some resolutions were offered and accepted, and then names were proposed as delegates to the convention at St. Paul. The delegates appointed were, Wm. Schmidt Sr., Red Lake Falls, F. S. DeMers, Fisher, Henry Weight, Louis Fontaine and John N. Ives, of Crookston. The delegates all being appointed the convention adjourned.

The street sprinkler is doing good work.

Dick Hussey has gone to Iowa for a few days.

Mr. Merrill of Fisher was in our city last Wednesday.

We notice that part of the Sherman House is to be moved.

Geo. Benham returned to this city last Tuesday evening.

For a nobby livery rig go to Schraeder's barn.

The Marshal is getting rid of quite a number of canines.

E. F. Wheelden, of St. Hilaire, was at the Linton last Monday.

No 1 hard wheat sold on the streets in Crookston last Wednesday at 92ct.

The shooting club of this city had a glass ball shoot last Monday afternoon.

The Hi. Henry Company, twenty-five people in all, registered at the Linton House.

Henry Kertson's advertisment on the end of the street sprinkler is e-mense.

Tom Sprague, the Davis Sewing machine man was in the city on Wednesday.

A. Allen is putting up a large building in Barrett's grove, 50x130, for a summer garden.

Wheat in the Red River Valley looks splendid, never better and we predict a bountiful harvest.

Henry Nolan who has been in Manitoba for some time past, arrived in our city last Tuesday.

Sheriff Zwickey's son has been quite sick for three or four days, but is improving rapidly.

The C. C. Band will give a social hop at Ericsson's Hall on next Monday evening all are invited. Ticks $1,00

Henry Utzinger got one of his hands mashed while helping to lift a large piece of timber on the new brewery building.

Chas. Rauch has sold out his business in Euclid and returned to Crookston again. Charlie thinks that there is no place like Crookston.

It would be well for people who want boots and shoes made to order, or repairing done, to call on Gilbert Dumas, Main Street.

G. M. Barber has returned from his trip West. Mr. Barber says that he had a very nice trip, but he would not care to locate in that country, that there are too many people there all ready. Crookston according to what everybody says is about as good a place as any.

Ray Palmer, of Warren, was in this week, enroute to Dakota in the interest of the farmer's elevator company. We learn that the number needed to insure success has been attained and that the work of building will be at once commenced so that the elevators may be ready to handle the next crop.

The Hi Henry combination played in Ericsson's Opera House last Tuesday evening to a crowded house. This entertainment was one of the best that we have ever had in this city, and every body was well pleased, and they may expect if they return to this city to be greeted with another full house.

You can get a good rig at Schraeder's Livery at reasonable prices.

K. D. Chase is putting up a building for Ellis & Johnson who have located in our city, and are going into the oil business. The building will be done about the 15th of June. This firm will carry a large stock of goods, and will compete with eastern prices and can supply the trade in any quantity. They will carry all kinds of lubricating oils and all products of petroleum. This firm showed their good judgment in selecting Crookston for a business location, and we are positive that they will soon establish a large trade in the Northwest.

Last week we noted the death of Wm. Monroe, but had no further particulars. It seems that he died very suddenly. He had returned from Grand Forks in the forenoon, apparently in perfect health and after awhile went to the stable to attend to some chores and not returning in some time was sought and found in a dying condition though conscious. His wife has been sick in bed for some time but on learning of his condition arose and went out to the stable. Mr. Monroe was able to converse with her but said that he was near the end. She took his head in her lap and talked encouragingly, telling him they would soon remove him to the house where they could care for him, but he told her he would never reach the house alive, and in a short time breathed his last. He was buried on Thursday attended by a large concourse of neighbors and friends.

Give Ed Schraeder a call if you want a good rig.

Two or three weeks ago we spoke of noticing the different show windows in the city. This week we wish to call special attention to the following show windows. Fontaine & Anglim on Main Street, general stock, show windows neatly arranged. Excelsior Clothing House, Main St., clothing & furnishings, people stop and gaze. O. A. Chiniquy, Main Street, Drygoods and Notions. The people stop to look, windows very attractive. Morris Bros., on Second Street. The eyes of passers by are dazzled by the bright array of silver ware and jewelry. P. J. Christianson, druggist, has the windows of his drug emporium beautifully decorated with plants, etc. In the O. O. D. Clothing House windows there is a fine showing of clothing and gents furnishings. Next week we expect to put several more on the list as the clerks in the different business houses in our city are all bound to do the best they can [illegible] show windows.

Friday is decoration day.

Mr. Allen, of Warren, was in the city last Monday.

Dennis Kelley was in from the thirteen towns on Wednesday.

For a good team and carriage call on T. H. Bjoin's livery, on Main Street.

A. Wentzel has put a new oak floor into his Second Street place and is fixing up in fine shape.

Sunday, June 1st, at 11 o'clock a. m. service in the Norwegian Lutheran Church, by Rev. A. C. Anderson.

Hon A. H. Baker, of Ada gave us a pleasant call on Wednesday, reporting crops flurishing in Norman Co.

See the new ad of Johnson & Stephens, and when in need of anything in their line call and see them. They are A No. 1.

John Lien, who is working a large farm in Tynsid, was in the city to-day. He reports crops along the Red River booming.

Last week we made mention of a smart young St. Hilaire lady, and on Saturday Harry Ives, the good-looking Spectator man, was in to see us. We did not give it away, however.

Two circuses in one day—Sells Bros. and the District Court strike this city on Monday, June 16th. Secure your reserved seats early. You pays your money you takes your choice.

W. H. Topping was called away suddenly to attend the sick bed of his mother who is very sick and he will therefore be unable to attend the Decoration services to morrow.

John Ostgard, the man whom the horse thief tried to remove from this terrestrial globe was in on Monday. Save a fine, healthy hole in his overcoat, made by the festive bullet he is all O. K.

We understand that word has been received by the forman of the work on T. B. Walker's mill, to push the work as fast as possible. The logs are on the way, a good many of them passed Red Lake Falls last Saturday.

The circus will be here June 16th, and I have got a new double door safe, manufactured by the Mosler Safe and Lock Co. that has never been used that I will sell at a very low figure. Call on me or leave word at the JOURNAL Office.

H. W. LEWIS.

The C. C. B. serenaded Mr. Walters last Monday evening. Mr. Walters ushered the boys into his dwelling and an hour or two passed very pleasantly. A table was spread, and the boys were the recipients of the best the country affords.

Bauschman & Milette, who bought the stock of greceries formerly owned by J. L. Bailey, are parties well known in Crookston and vicinity, and no doubt will build up a fine grocery trade. THE JOURNAL wishes them success in their new venture.

E. S. McNaul has sojourned in the celebrated thirteen towns which he pronounces to be the garden spot of the world. Vegetation is well advanced and every thing is booming. Settlers are coming rapidly and most of them have plenty of means with which to do business from the start.

Gaze upon the new broad gauge ad, of the Red Star in this issue and go and see what LePage can do for you in that line. He proposes to build up a good reputation if he dont lay up a cent, therefore he keeps only the best and purest goods and sells at figures to correspond with the times.

The association who are building and fixing up a park, are bound to make a success of it. The horse thief that we mentioned in our last issue, was captured last Thursday, and brought to this city the same evening. He was captured at Twin Valley, about fifteen miles east of Ada. Several parties had given chase but he had escaped. Two men who were after him, came in sight of him on Wednesday and ordered him to halt. They had a Winchester rifle, but the thief held them at bay with his revolver; he told them that if they would let him escape south he would give them the team. This they would not consent to do but fired at him, he also fired at them in return, they did not hit him, but when he fired the ball went through one of the men's overcoat. After this they did not follow him quite so close and the result was he got away. The next day (Thursday) it was raining very hard and he went to the house of Mr. Olson for shelter, from the description that Mr. Olson had received he knew his man. Mr. Olson noticed that the fellow was on his guard all the time; they finally persuaded him to sit down and play a game of cards. When they arose from the table Mr. Olson caught one of the fellow's arms and his father the other and he was handcuffed and immediately started for Crookston. There were several parties in pursuit. The facts relative to his capture were as follows: When the parties from Gentilly came to Crookston, and made known the fact that the team was stolen, Sheriff Zwickey immediately got some postal cards printed, giving a full description of the man and team and sent them to every point possible and the man was captured no doubt by the foresight of our Sheriff in sending out such description. The thief is not inclined to talk much. At one time he gave his name as Lowall but afterward said that they might call him Billy Jim as that was the name he went by on the plains.

Lloyd S. Majors, Ex-Preacher and Ex-Lawyer, Hanged in California.

Lloyd S. Majors, was hanged at Oakland, Cal., near San Francisco, on Friday last. On the Monday previous, the condemned man made a desperate effort to escape. He possessed immense strength, and he overpowered the two death watches and jailer, who happened at the moment to be in his cells. Wrenching the keys from the jailer's grasp, he dashed through the door across the jail yard, out into the street. But just as he thought he had succeeded, he was encountered by two firemen who had been attracted by the noise. They recognized Majors' and another struggle ensued, so fierce that Majors, arm was broken and he was rendered helpless. He was conducted back to his cell, and from that moment he abandoned all hope. In conversation with J. B. Renowder, brother of one of the murdered men, he said: "You may draw the life-blood from my arm, and with this pen I will write my innocence of the crime in my own blood." As he spoke he appealed to Heaven to witness the truth of his statement. Majors mounted the scaffold without assistance, and took up his position on the drop, firmly erect. He refused to say a word, maintaining throughout a stolid silence. At 12:13 the bolt was pulled, Majors fell, and his neck was cleanly broken. Majors was forty-six years old, born near the home of Garfield in Ohio, graduated at Ann Arbor college in 1870, and began the practice of law. But afterward joined the Methodist ministry. After preaching several years he went to the Pacific coast and settled in Los Gatos, where he became the owner of a hotel. The double murder for which he was executed was committed a year ago. He planned it, leaving the execution, however, to two tools, named Jewell and Showers. They were both tried and convicted, but before this all the facts in the case became known, and the agency of Majors was revealed.

Calamity at Dubuque, Iowa.

At Dubuque, Iowa, on Sunday afternoon, a dire calamity occurred at Carr, Ryder & Wheeler's planing mill. The engine room exploded with terrible loss of life and great damage to surrounding property. The report was heard all over the city, and buildings surrounding the mill were shaken by the violent concussion. The air for blocks around the mill was filled with debris, consisting of heavy rock, timbers and portions of the boilers. At the same time, the debris, etc., caught fire, adding manifold terror to the situation.

After the smoke and flames had somewhat subsided, through the efforts of the firemen the search for the missing parties began. The first found was the body of the engineer, Milo M. Mellen, which was discovered about seventeen feet from the boiler. His body was terribly mangled, almost beyond recognition. At half-past 4 o'clock the second fireman, Michael McLaughlin was found. He was horribly mangled. Several physicians were on the ground rendering assistance wherever needed. The first fireman's name was Fritz Villdanger, and his mangled body was found in the door leading from the main portion of the engine room. His arms and legs were shattered. The remains of all three were speedily removed to their residences. Probably the saddest sight of all was the discovery of the bodies of two little children of Charles May, adjoining the engine room. Adjoining this house was a yard in which were playing three little children named May. They were killed outright and terribly scalded. Several others received slight bruises, which are not supposed to be serious. The loss to property is $7,000; fully insured in the Hartford Insurance company. The firm employed 200 men.

The Blind Pool Game in Washington.

Congressman Horr of Michigan, Milliken of Maine, and numerous other statesmen who have so far kept their names out of the papers, together with three or four hundred department clerks, are sadly lamenting the departure of a friend named George H. Lewis. He left this locality very suddenly and unexpectedly last Sunday, and his present whereabouts are unknown. There is no anxiety for his welfare, however, as he is considered competant to take care of himself, and is well supplied with means. Two or three hundred thousand dollars were deposited with him by the aforesaid officials as margins, and with this money Mr. Lewis operated in oil. He did business on the blind pool plan, and for the first few months he paid amazing profits to the members of his "syndicates," as he called them, and there was nothing around Washington that offered such great advantages to investors as Mr. Lewis' blind pools. Men and women put all the money they had or could borrow into his hands, and when he thought he had "skinned the town," Mr. Lewis skipped. There are a large number of army and navy officers who miss their friend sincerely, to the extent of from $500 to $5,000.

Important Telegraph Decision.

Des Moines, Iowa Special: An important and interesting decision was rendered in the United States circuit court in this city, involving the liability of the telegraph companies for damages for failure to deliver messages promptly. Nov. 9, 1882, George F. Hall at Des Moines, at 8 a. m., gave the following message to the telegraph company:

"Charles T. Hall, Exchange, Oil City, Pa.; Buy me 10,000. If you think it safe wire me."

Meaning for his brother to buy 10,000 barrels of oil for him. The company ommitted the address—"Charles T. Hall"—and the message was received at Oil City directed simply to "Exchange," which is the name of the building where the board of trade met. The company after carrying the message to the building, and on the refusal of the officers of the board of trade to receive it, procured the correct address and delivered the message to Charles T. Hall at 6 p. m., too late to make the purchase directed. The price of oil at the time the message ought to have been received 11:30 a. m., and when the oil would have been purchased, if received, was $1.17 per barrel. The price at the opening of the market the next day at 10 a. m. was $1.35. The plaintiff gets a judgment for the difference on 10,000 barrels, being $1,800, and the court certify a division of opinion on certain legal questions to the supreme court of the United States, in case the defendants desire to carry the case there.

Arrest of a Bank Rascal.

James D. Fish, president of the Marine bank, New York, was arrested Sunday, the 26th, by Deputy United States Marshal Grimes upon a warrant issued by United States Marshal Shields, upon an affidavit made before Commissioner Shields by Augustus Scribs, national bank examiner. He deposed that after a careful examination he found that President Fish had misappropriated funds belonging to the bank to the amount of $1,141,000. This was done between March 1 and May 6, 1884, by a series of credits to the firm of Grant & Ward of moneys in sums of from $25,000 to $160,000 at various dates, and they were entered in the books of the bank as loans to imaginary persons, and secured by imaginary collaterals in stocks and bonds, none of which loans had ever been made, and the transactions were stated to be entirely fictitious.

Minnesota Flour Mills Burned.

The Sand Creek mills at Jordan, Scott Co., Minn., owned by Mr. Frank Nicolin, burned last Sunday morning. The fire was first discovered about 1:30 o'clock, in the basement, but was under such headway that the flames could not be controlled. The mill was in operation at the time. The mill and stock were insured for about $42,000. The proprietor estimates the total loss at about $65,000. Two car loads of flour, about 2,000 bushels of wheat and seventy tons of feed were burned, on which there was no insurance. The insurance on mills, etc., amounted to about $35,000.

The Polish newspapers are furiously indignant over the conviction and sentence at Berlin of the venerable Polish poet, Joseph Ignace Krazewski, to three and a half years' imprisonment in a German fortress. They also accuse the German chancellor with being at the head of a contemptible conspiracy to traduce the honor of Poland, because that country has proved herself the friend of France, and thus [illegible]

Mr. John B. Tolman, a veteran printer of Lynn, Mass., has given the Young Men's Christian Association of that city an estate valued at $30,000, stipulating that the income shall be used in promoting the cause of temperance.

The widow of the late Gen. Thomas L. Kane of Philadelphia has donated to the board of trustees of the Presbyterian Hospital the Thomson House at Kane, Pa., for hospital uses, in accordance with the intention of her husband. She desires that it be not restricted to sick and helpless paupers but that its policy be the most liberal. The hotel property is valued at $100,000.

On his recent birthday celebration, Bismarck was offered the compliment of an honorary membership in the Scientific Society of Berlin—a high distinction which Von Moltke was glad to accept. But the Chancellor curiously does not approve of vivisection. Nor has he forgiven Professor Mommsen. So he declined the society's offer. "Nothing on earth would induce me," he wrote, "to become in any way whatever the colleague of Virchow, or of Mommsen. I am a Doctor of Laws of Gottingen and an honorary citizen of Berlin. I am satisfied."

Rev. Samuel D. Ferguson, a native of Liberia and a full-blooded negro, was chosen by the Episcopal House of Bishops, in session at New York, to be Missionary Bishop for Cape Palmas, in Africa. Marie Taglioni, whose death at Marseilles, France, was announced, was the most celebrated dancer of her day. She was born on the 23d of April, 1806, at Stockholm, Sweden, where her father was ballet master and leading dancer at the theater. Her mother was a daughter of the celebrated Swedish tragedian and singer Karsten. Marie began the study of dancing when 8 years of age, and on the 10th of June, 1822, made her debut at the Vienna theater. From her first appearance her success was phenomenal, and within a few months she became the queen of dancers. She could never be induced to appear in the short dress usually worn in the ballet. She became the wife of Count Gilbert De Voisins to whom she had a son and daughter. The latter is Princess Marguerite Trowbetzkay. In 1847 while at the zenith of her fame, she retired from the stage.

The father of Mrs. Celia Thatcher was a crank. He had been defeated for an office by the New Hampshire people, whereupon he decided to abandon them to their sins. In order that he might be able to witness their torture he bought the isle of Shoals and built a bit of shanty no it, where he lived in comparative solitude for a number of years. Gradually the cabin was enlarged until it became a summer hotel, though conducted in the most indifferent manner as to whether guests came or went. They were never sought after. When the daughter Celia reached the age of 15 a young lawyer at the island for his health, fell in love with her. Duly and respectfully he requested her hand of her father who irritably ordered him off the island Respecting the rights of proprietorship, the young man removed to an adjacent one, and, there erecting a little hut, avowed his intention of remaining until the daughter became of age, when he would marry her. Recognizing, probably, the fellow's obstinacy and strong will, her father relented, stipulating only a year's delay. That passing they were married.

"Land-Poor" Examples.

One of the strangest forms of poverty is when a man becomes "land-poor." I have known a number of such instances, the latest being John H. Dean, the real-estate magnate of Harlem. Had his property been one-third its present extent he would have been worth a half-million. As it is, however, he is a bankrupt, reminding one of the lessons taught so long ago by Pope:

O sons of earth! Attempt ye still to rise,
By mountains piled on mountains to the skies;
Heaven still with laughter the vain toil surveys
And buries madmen in the heaps they raise.

Dean's first operations were highly successful. He bought land at Harlem and erected houses which found ready sale at a large profit. This led to an extension of business, and then we have the old story repeated—embarrassment, and a long struggle, ending in failure. Men who run to extremes often find themselves ruined before they know it, and a number of real-estate magnates have shared this fate. One of the most remarkable was the late Samuel B. Ruggles, who at one time was the largest property-holder in Union square. He built the Clarendon House and ought to have been a millionaire. Instead of that, however, he only became "land-poor" and died a bankrupt. Another case was that of a young man whom I first knew as a clerk, and I well remember the day when he told of his good fortune in getting a situation in a bank. He was enterprising and thrifty and gradually became a dealer in real estate. His plan was to purchase by giving heavy mortgages, and then sell as opportunity occurred. This worked well while business was good, and he was at one time worth a quarter of a million. Then came a revolution and he became "land-poor," ending as usual, in failure, reminding one again of Pope, who tells us

Each has his share; and who would more obtain
Shall find his pleasure pays not half the pain.

Tricks of Great Orators.

Great orators have not scrupled to use the arts of the actor to produce their effects. Lord Brougham, while protesting against the rejection of the Reform Bill by the House of Lords, cried out: "I implore you upon my knees!" kneeling before them on the "wool-sack," upon which the Lord Chancellor sits when presiding in the House of Lords. Sheridan, having finished his famous speech in the trial of Warren Hastings, sank back apparently fainting in the arms of his friends. Edmund Burke, at the end of a speech upon the atrocities which might be expected from the French in case of an invasion, drew forth an enormous two-edged dagger, and, exclaiming, "This is the weapon which will be pointed at your throats and mine!" dashed it on the floor with a tragic gesture. Shortly afterward Lord Cairns, speaking against Burke (who was suspected of having amassed his wealth dishonestly), exclaimed: "And this is the weapon which is used with fatal effect against you and me!" dragging out, with Burke's gesture, a five-pound note. As every one looked to see him dash it on the floor, he quietly folded it and put it in his pocket. One of the most noted criminal lawyers now in this country, while pleading the cause of his client, is invariably so overcome by his innocence and wrongs that his voice fails, he chokes, sobs, and is forced to sit down to recover himself. "I should think, Mr. D——," said Judge M—— to him, lately, "that the jury would understand your little drama by this time." "Ah, your honor forgets," said D——, his eyes twinkle, "that it is always a new jury before whom I play." Prince Bismarck has a profound contempt not only for such tricks of oratory, but for oratory itself. "It is but the gloss that hides truth," he said lately; "your eloquent fellow is like a woman who has a naturally fine figure and who screws it into stays and covers it with tasteless finery."

Unveiling of the Luther Statue.

The statue to Martin Luther was dedicated in Washington on Wednesday. The exercises took place on a platform built above the pedestal, which covered the entire park in front of the church, and when the exercises began the 1,200 seats provided were filled, and many spectators were standing on the walks and in the streets. Directly in front of the stane were seated the speakers, and above them was stretched a canvas protection from the sun. A blue cord was suspended on one side, and was connected with an American flag which concealed the statue from view. Justice Miller presided, in place of Cheif Justice Waite, who was detained by sickness. Seated near him were the speakers, and officers of the association and invited guests, including prominent Lutheran clergymen from different states. Senator Congor (Mich.) delivered the address of the day, and Rev. J. S. Morris, D. D. spoke at some length. The cord attached to the flag covering the statue was then pulled, and as the drapery fell disclosing the face of the great reformer, the band rendered Luthers famous battle hymn. The statute stands in the large triangular space fronting the Memorial Lutheran church at the intersection of Vermont avenue and Fourteenth street. It looks south and faces the statue of Gen. Thomas, which is scarcely a stone's throw distant. "Luther place," which will be the name of the place below, is the Memorial church. It will be deeded to the statue association. The statue is a fine piece of German workmanship. It is an exact counterpart of the central figure of the world-renowned group at Worms, Germany. In it Luther appears in colossal bronze, about eleven feet six inches high, and standing upon a pedestal of granite nearly sixteen feet in height.

An Expert Swindler at Large.

A successful confidence game was played on a number of business men of St. Paul Tuesday afternoon, in which Myers & Finch lost $1,000; Glenny & Gilman, $300; C. C. Berg, $300; Emil Geist $410; George Palmes, $300; E. A. Brown $600; Hotel Livingston, $100; and Dyer & Howard, $150; total, 3,160. For the past twenty days or more a man has been coming occasionally to St. Paul, representing himself to be Wilbur H. James, a member of the firm of John James & Co., heavy iron foundry men of La Crosse, Wis. James usually stopped at the Hotel Livingston. He had lithographed letter-heads purporting to be John James & Co., in which the names "John James," "Wilbur H. James," and "Otto Lunk" were printed as members of the firm. In about an hour thereafter he had closed all the bargains he had been making for the last twenty days, paying for the goods with checks drawn upon the various banks of La Crosse in his favor and signed "Jno. James & Co." In an hour or so afterward it was found that every check he had passed was forged.

Mrs. C. A. Taylor, 256 Folsom street, Buffalo, N. Y., says:—"Attacked with sciatic rheumatism, I lay on my bed for six long years. The pains in my limbs were so severe I was unable even to lift my feet from the floor. Thomas' Electric Oil cured me. It is a remarkable medicine. I do not know of its equal."

I was in the explosion of the Grand Opera House, Jan. 18, 1883. There I received a bad cut on my knee and had to take to my bed. Thomas' Eclectric Oil helped me out in almost no time.—Chas. Reed, 354 Jackson street, Milwaukee, Wis.

No question but that Thomas' Electric is a valuable Oil; at least it is the best thing we have struck and we have had large experience in medicines. My family uses it, the hired men uses it, I use it.—W. H. Kirkpatrick, 411 Third avenue, Evansville, Ind.

My sister-in-law was cured of deafness by Thomas' Electric Oil. I am using it for the same purpose. It is really a good thing.—J. J. Kline, Ashley Luzerne Co., Pa.

My father had terrible rheumatism for almost six months. Thomas' Elcrtric Oil cured him. It is the best medicine for rheumatism that I am acquainted with.—M. Bailey, 6(1)66 Elliot street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Frank James Coming to Minnesota.

St Louis Post-Dispatch: "As soon as this case at Otterville is over," remarked Gov. Charles P. Johnson. "I mean to take Frank James right up to Minnesota and introduce him to the governor."

"Isn't there some talk of lynching in case that programme is carried out?"

"Not a bit. We will go up there and put Frank James under the protection of the state. He goes to damand trial for offense with which he is charged, and of which he is innocent, and I believe the citizens of Minnesota are too manly not to appreciate his conduct. Frank James isn't afraid to go anyhow, and that is about the programme decided upon."

"When will this occur?"

"In the fall. The cases in Otterville will not be finished before then."

The Princess Like-Like, of the Hawaiian Islands, who has been spending several weeks in San Francisco, left for home a few days ago. She received many social attentions, and created a sensation at some gatherings by appearing in a rich costume with long black gloves, and not a single article in her toilet to relieve the somber color. As she is as black as the ace of spades, the effect of such a figure among brilliant party costumes may be imagined.

Donnell, Lanson & Simpson, exploded bankers of New York say in a circular to creditors: "We propose to all our creditors to pay them with our notes, payable in twelve and twenty-four months with six per cent. interest, with the honorable understanding that, if our business warrants it, obligations shall be discharged without respect to their maturity. This plan will enable us to resume with safety.

A THRILLING EPISODE.

A Locomotive Engineer's Instinct—How he Saved a Train and How he Saved Himself.

On one of the darkest and stormiest nights of the recent unusual winter, the express on one of the leading New York railroads was moving westward from Albany. The engine's headlight threw a strong reflection in advance, but the storm was so blinding it was almost impossible to distinguish anything even at a short distance. Under such circumstances instinct necessarily takes the place of sight. All seemed to be going well, when, in an instant, the engineer reversed his engine, applied the air brakes, and came to a full stop. Why he did so he could not tell any more than any of us can account for the dread of coming disaster and death, and to the wondering inquiry of his fireman he simply said: "I feel that something's wrong." Seizing a lantern he swung himself down from the cab and went forward to investigate. Everything appeared to be right, and he was about to return to his engine when his eye caught sight of a peculiar appearance at the joint of the rail next to him. Brushing the accumulated snow away, he looked a moment, and then uttered an exclamation of horror. The rails on both sides had been unspiked and would have turned over the instant the engine touched them. What inspired this attempt at train-wrecking is unknown, but it was presumed the confederates of some prisoners who were on the train hoped, in the confusion of an accident, to deliver their friends.

Engineer John Donohoe of Albany, to whose wonderful instinct was due the salvation of the train, when asked by the writer why he stopped his engine, said:

"I can't tell why. I only know I felt something was wrong."

"Do you have these feelings often when upon the road?" continued the writer.

"No, very seldom, although for the past twenty years I have been in a condition to feel apprehension at almost anything."

"How is that?"

"Why, I have been a victim of one of the worst cases of dyspepsia ever known. I have not been confined to my bed, as like thousands of others, I am compelled to work whether able or not. Indeed, when it first began I had only a loss of appetite, a faint feeling that would not go away and a bad taste in my mouth, and I finally got those terrible craving and knawing feelings that make life so unbearable and are known as general debility."

"What did you do?"

"I tried physicians until I became discouraged I gave eight different ones fair tests, but none of them benefited me. I then tried proprietary medicines, but they failed, likewise. It looked pretty dark for me so far as any peace or enjoyment in this world were concerned and I became terribly discouraged."

"You certainly do not look that way now."

"Oh, no, indeed, I am perfect health now," was the reply "and I propose to continue so. My nervousness is entirely gone; I can sleep nights; the aching numbness has disappeared; the pale, sickly appearence has given place to the color of health, and I have readily put on flesh. This is what has been accomplished by means of Warner's Tippecanoe. If I can be cured after a chronic illness of nearly a quarter of a century I believe all suffering in a similar manner can be restored by using the same great remedy."

Such is the testimony of a man who could detect and remove unseen danger on the road but could not remove the danger from within his own system until brought face to face with the great preparation above-named which did so much for him and can do so much for all those who require it.

Spokane Joe, sub-chief of the Colville Indians, was arrested some time ago by the military forces brought down to Portland, Oregon, from Walla Walla and turned over to the civil authorities for trial. He is a notorious desperado and was arrested for killing several of his tribe. The prisoner's counsel filed a demurrer to further proceeding on the ground that the civil court had not competent jurisdiction and that the Indian should be returned to his tribe and be tried by them. The court sustained demurrer and Joe will be taken back to Fort Colville, and turned over to his tribe. Summary justice will doubtless be dealt out according to the Indian notion of vengeance.

POTASH!
Iodide of Potassium is one of the strongest of the minerals used in medicine, and has produced much suffering in the world. Taken for a long time and in large doses, it dries up the gastric juices, impairs digestion, the stomach refuses food, and the patient declines in health and weight. Persons with Blood or Skin Diseases should be careful how they take these mineral poisons, as in most instances the effect of them is to almost permanently impair the constitution. To take the place of these poisons we offer you a safe, sure, prompt and permanent relief from your troubles. Swift's Specific is entirely a vegetable preperation, and it is easy to convince you of its merit.

I have cured permanently Blood Taint in the third generation by the use of Swift's Specific, after I had most signally failed with Mercury and Potash.

MY LOVE.

My love is a rose, a red, red rose,
Whose beauty all may see—
A smile and a blush for each she hath,
But only a thorn for me.

My love is a violet, tender and true,
Whose fragrance pure and free
Perfumes the air like the breath of prayer,
Yet never a thought for me.

My love is the sun, the radiant sun,
Whose glory all may see—
She sheds her beams on all around,
And not one ray for me.

Oh, her beauty and blushes, her radiant smile!
How quickly my cares will flee,
When one day Love shall lead my love
A captive home to me.

BRINDLE.

I first met him selling peanuts at the corner of Dauphine Street. A thin, wiry little fellow, with quick, bright gray eyes, which seemed to take in many things at once; but his mouth had a pathetic droop at the corners, as if the things he did see had no cheer for him.

"Auntie, let's buy some of Brindle's peanuts," my little niece whispered to me.

"Brindle's peanuts? Who on earth is Brindle?"

"Look at him. That boy with the ragged jacket, and his hair all striped and streaked, like our old brindle cow.

Looking at the boy, I saw that his tattered hat covering only a portion of his head, the hair exposed to the sun was bleached a dirty yellow, and the rest a pale brown.

"He's an awful good boy," Constance whispered, "and he never takes a teenty nickel for himself. Mr. Sothern knows all about him, and he told us he was working to take his mamma back to Scotland to her people. He used to run errands for Mr. Sothern. That's how he came to know about him. Mr. Sothern buys a heap of peanuts to help him along."

"Well, we'll help him to the extent of twenty-five cents," I said, "Go and buy your peanuts, Connie."

Connie was a demure little lassie of nine years old, and, being an only child, was more womanly than her years. She knew everybody, and had a word or smile for all, but she fairly beamed upon Brindle that morning.

"Is your mamma better?" she asked.

"No, miss," with a sigh. "She's worse, and that downhearted she wants me to take her to the hospital. It would not be a gude place for the mither, for if her room is na sae bonny, there's a big tree at the window, and it's a braw outlook for her."

"I suppose your mother has always lived in the country!" I asked.

"Oh yes. We never lived in a city till we came here to meet father; and he was dead with yellow fever when we landed. If it wasn't for the big, bonny tree, mither would have died. But she'll see the woods of Craigie Burn if I live."

I smiled at the decision with which Brindle spoke, and then I sighed, remembering the piles and piles of peanuts which would have to be sold before the sick woman would see "Craigie Burn" woods.

"Where does your mother live?" I asked.

"Number 14 B Street. Her name is Wilson, and I am Andrew Wilson, ma'am."

"Let's go and see Brindle's mother, auntie," Connie said, the next day.

"Why don't you call him by his real name, Andrew?" I asked.

"O auntie, I can't. It was Brindle I was so sorry for. It was Brindle's peanuts I bought, and it seems to me as if Andrew isn't the same boy. I'll ask him if he minds me calling him Brindle. Mamma says I may take Mrs. Wilson a nice cold lunch, and see if she's comfor'ble." Connie had a bad a habit of dropping her "t's" on all possible occasions.

Number 14 was soon reached. A small, shabby cottage of four rooms, divided in half by a plank partition, two of them being occupied by a noisy Irish family. The Wilson's rooms, though bare, were clean. So too, was the young woman seated at the open window, who turned her pale, patient face towards us as we entered.

"A gude mornin', leddy," she said. "Will you tak' a seat? My knees is that bad with rheumatiz the morn that I can't stand on my feet. You've come for the handkerchief maybe, and I've been too bad to work the name on it. My hand is swelled too, you see."

No, I answered. I had left no handkerchief there to be embroidered.

"I heard from your son you were worse to-day," I said; "and so my little niece and I came to see if we could do anything for you."

"He's a good boy," Connie interrupted, "and we buy a heap of peanuts from him, so he can make money to take you back home."

The poor woman's lip quivered and her eyes fixed themselves upon the waving branches of the tree at her window. But in a moment big tears rolled down her cheeks—silent tears, for she uttered not a word or sound.

"It's the word 'hame,' ma'am," she said, after a few moments. "It brings back bonny Craigie Burn and the old father in his bit cottage, lookin' and longin' for me! And then my poor Andrew, toilin' and moilin,' and thinkin' he can make siller enough to take us back hame. It's like a bairn's play, ma'am, for he canna do it. Oh no, puir boy, he canna."

"Have you no friends in Scotland who could send you your passage-money?" I asked.

"Freens, yes; but puir bodies, they have a' they can do to get along. The old father is alane, for I am a' the bairn he has. No, ma'am, I dinna hope any more, but that my sorrowful days will not last long. Puir Andrew canna help me."

"I b'lieve he'll make money enough for you," Connie interrupted, her fair face flashing with indignation. "Mr. Sothern says if anybody can do it, he will. You ought to 'courage him, 'stead of sayin' he can't; and he never spendin' a nickle, but savin' it all for you. My papa tells me where there's a will, there's a way. I know he'll take you back home, and you mustn't talk that way."

Mrs. Wilson stared in dismay at this rebuke from Connie, who looked like a ruffled bantam. The next moment to my surprise, she seized the child's hand and pressed it to her lips.

"I'll mind ye, my little leddy!" she cried. "I'll take the words of a babe as a sign from the Lord. He rebukes me for my little faith!"

Connie did not look one bit embarrassed by being elevated to the rank of prophetess, but nodded her curly head and said, gravely,—

"Yes, he'll do it, I know he will."

I looked at Mrs. Wilson's specimens of embroidery, and found them exquisite. But I glanced at her swollen hands, and felt very doubtful that she would ever take up such work again.

"No, I'll get back the nice touch nae mair," she said, smiling sadly, when she saw my glance at her crippled hands. "I canna help Andrew, but as the little leddy says, I maunna hinder him."

We left Mrs. Wilson with a promise to return shortly. "Brindle," as Connie would call him, we saw every day, and his business was thriving, judging from his smiles and cheery greeting. He, at least, fancied the goal attainable. One day Connie, her friend Mr. Sothern, and myself, stopped at his stand to buy peanuts.

"How is your mother?" I asked.

"Oh, better. Her heart, she says, is not so sair for hame. But we'll be in Craigie Burn woods next summer, I'm thinkin'."

A procession came prancing down the narrow street, and Brindle quickly moved his stand on the sidewalk to get out of the way. We stood at the corner watching the moving mass, when we saw Brindle dart forward as if he was crazy, and pick up something under the very hoofs of the horses.

"Look! look!" he cried, running up to us, and holding a large pocket-book above his head. "Somebody has lost a' their siller. what maun I do wi' it sir?" to Mr. Sothern.

"Come in here," Mr. Sothern said, leading the way to the nearest store. It was a large pocket-book, crammed with bank-notes to the amount of one thousand dollars. There were several drafts on a Northen bank, but they were not endorsed, nor was there a scrap of paper in the pocket-book by which we could trace the owner. Altogether the value of the contents was between four and five thousand dollars.

"We will advertise this immediately,' Mr. Sothern said. "It will soon be claimed, so be very careful of it, Andrew,"

"Hoot! do ye think I'd rin the risk of losin' a' that gear?" Andrew cried. He had not the least idea of the value of the find. "Na, na, Mr. Sothern, ye maun keep it till the mon comes for it. Maybe he'll gie me five dollars for finding it. Oh, wouldn't that be just grand!"

"I'll guarantee the five dollars," Mr. Sothern said, laughing. "And now I'm off to see about the advertisement."

The next morning Mr. Sothern brought in the Times.

"Look there," he said, smiling.

It was an advertisement. "Two hundred dollars reward for a pocket-book containing a large sum of money and some valuable papers. Apply at No. 9, Charles Street."

"What does that mean?" he asked.

"It means Craigie Burn Wood, and joy to our peanut-boy!" I cried, clapping my hands. "Oh, if I could only see him when he gets the good news!"

"That brought me here, and surely Connie, Brindle's staunchest friend, must see the result of her prophecy. Connie, Brindle is going back home."

"I knowed it," Connie said, gravely, with her usual disregard for grammar.

"Now you two must go to Mrs. Wilson's, and I will tell Brindle to go home about eleven o'clock, that he will be wanted there, by the owner of the pocket-book. No. 9 and I will drop in about that time. Don't give them a hint."

We did not, though Brindle wondered and wondered if he would really get his five dollars.

"But five dollars is muckle siller for just pickin' up a pocket-book," said simple Mrs. Wilson.

"But you must remember that there were ten chances to one, that whoever picked it up, would never return it to the owner."

"Maybe," she said, simply. "I ken weel there's mony rogues in the warld, but no among my people, nor my man's."

At this moment Mr. Sothern entered with an excitable little gentleman, who instantly asked,—

"Is that the boy?"

"Yes, that is the boy."

He seized Andrew's hand and shook it violently.

"You're a boy in ten thousand!" he cried, "Its a miracle, the return of that pocket-book. There was in it a paper in a hidden lining, and its loss would have almost ruined me. Here's the two hundred dollars reward, and I hear you want to go back to Scotland. I'll pay your passage, so you won't have to spend a cent of this. Bless me! What's the matter with the boy?"

Brindle, when the notes were put in his hands, stared at them, turned ghastly pale, and gasped for breath. Then as if his limbs could not support him he sunk gradually to the floor, his mouth working, yet not uttering an articulate sound. A glass of water thrown in his face brought him to his senses, and then he crawled to his mother and put his face in her lap.

"Look up, my gude bairn," she cried, the tears streaming down her face, "It's a' true, and I'll see bonny Craigie Burn before I dee. Bless the Lord, my son, that His hand has lifted us up when we were sair, sair troubled, and saw no deliverance!"

We slipped away, feeling that the scene was not for the eyes of strangers. Three days afterwards, we were on the steam-vessel Caledonia, bidding a last farewell to Mrs. Wilson and Brindle.

"Fare ye weel, my bonny little leddy," she said to Connie. "I'll ne'er forget how you heartened me when the black waters seemed aboon my head. No better freens will we find at hame, and I'am thinkin' we'll write to you and tell you how we fare. It isn't as if we went back without a penny, but it's a deal of money we have, and Andrew will mak' it more. The Lord spoke to me through your innocent lips that day, and till I dee I'll ne'er forget you."

She kissed Connie's hand with a kind of awe as if she was scarcely human, and then we took leave of Brindle. As for Connie, forgetting her high role, she cried aloud and was carried on shore sobbing.

"I'll never eat another peanut, never, never, now Brindle's gone! I hate the sight of 'em, and, auntie, you shan't never, never bring me by Dauphine Street!"

I am glad to inform my young readers that Connie's distaste to peanuts lasted just two days. The third day she took to them ag'ain, saying mournfully,—

"They make me member poor Brindle, for the peanut-boy cheated me awful, and he gave me such a heap, you know, auntie. I wish he was back."—Youth's Companion.

ARMY SKETCHES.

A Heroine of the War.

"Well I got her a place in the treasury department, and it was there she got acquainted with her husband; but,—— it, I think she is entitled to a pension." This is what General Philip H. Sheridan said to a newspaper writer the other day. Recently while standing in Winchester, Va., on the mound that marks the site of old Fort London of French and Indian memory, and viewing thence the ruins of the redoubts from behind which the union general Milroy, poured hot shot into the battle-scarred town that had long reigned as queen of the valley, and seeing the magnificent mansion that Judge Pendleton had erected on the very spot where the union soldiers razed to the ground the palatial residence of Ex-Senator Mason, the rebel emissary, whose capture, together with that of Slidell, almost involved us in war with England, my attention was directed to a house where formerly lived Miss Rebecca Wright, the young Quaker girl who rendered such signal service to Gen. Sheridan and the union cause that Early was sent "whirling up the valley," and Senator Simon Cameron declared that the dashing cavalryman ought to make her his wife. Though Sheridan failed to act affirmatively upon this proposition, he interested himself in various projects in her behalf, as detailed in this article, and still declares with more force than elegance that she is "entitled to a pension."

The service she rendered the union cause was the furnishing at the risk of her own life, of information upon which the bloody battle of Winchester was fought and won on September 19, 1864. The true story of what Miss Wright did and how she was rewarded for it has never been published, though garbled partial accounts of it have appeared in the public prints.

Sheridan assumed command of the union forces in the Shenandoah Valley on August 4th, 1864. Gen. Early's confederate troops occupied Winchester and Martinsburg and held possession of that "good, broad highway that Thomas Buchanan Read has immortalized in verse. In his official report of this famous campaign in the valley addressed to Brevet Maj. Gen. John A Rawlins, chief of staff ("Rebellion Record," Vol. XII., pp. 718), Sheridan says: "As I have learned beyond doubt from my scouts that Kershaw's division, which consisted of four brigades, was to be ordered back to Richmond I had for two weeks patiently awaited its withdrawal." Then, becoming impatient, he turned to Gen. Crook, now famous as a humane and successful Indian fighter, and inquired if he knew any one in Winchester who would be willing to furnish the desired information. Cook had been fighting in the valley for a considerable while prior to Sheridan's arrival and was well acquainted in and out of Winchester.

He knew favorably a widow named Rachel Wright and her daughter Rebecca. They kept a boarding house on Main street, in Winchester. They were of Quaker origin. Whenever hostilities were sufficiently suspended to permit they attended the Friends' Meeting-House, about a mile from Winchester; but notwithstanding their profession of the tenets of Fox and Penn, and their consequent aversion to a resort to arms, they were staunch adherents of the union and looked with fond anticipation to the time when the stars and staipes would triumph finally though of necessity they were compelled to suppress their feeling of loyalty to the government. Gen. Crook said to Sheridan that he thought this Quaker Girl would furnish any information in her power. So an old darkey, who had a pass to go in and out of town for the purpose of selling garden vegetables there, and who thought that "Linkum's sogers am a sight better dan dem Early slave-beaters," left Sheridan's headquarters one day early in September with his wagon filled with vegetables and his mouth loaded with a tin-foil wad, inside of which was a note written on tissue paper to Rebecca Wright.

She promptly replied and on the 14th of September again sent word—still using the darkey's mouth for a mail-bag—that she had learned from some of the rebel officers who boarded at her mother's house that Kershaw's four brigades would start for Richmond on the morrow, passing through Winchester on their way.

This intelligence decided Sheridon to attack Early. Four days later Winchester was again in the possession of the Union troops, the rebels had been sent "whirling up the valley," and Sheridan had himself thanked the plucky Quaker girl whose loyalty had made possible a victory that virtually broke the back bone of rebel resistance in that fertile valley, so long the storehouse of Southern supplies. In the official report quoted above the following appears: "On the night of the 15th I received reliable information that Kershaw's division was marching through Winchester and in the direction of Front Royal."

"That "reliable" information was none other than what Rebecca Wright heard from the rebel officers in her mother's parlor, and which she promptly conveyed to Sheridan via the darkey's mouth.

Sheridan did not forget his fair benefactress in the distressing times that followed. The hungry rebel hordes had pretty well depleted the resources of man and soil in the immediate vicinity of Winchester and far up and down the beautiful pike that for many a year prior to the war had maintained its pre-eminence among American's most magnificent highways, pillage and devastation had followed in the tracks Confederate and Union troops alike. Indeed, I was told by the old gentleman who is the local historian of the town and the country thereabouts, that the contending forces marched in and out of Winchester 87 different times during the four years they ranged and despoiled the fair valley, beneath whose, now gradually rejuvenating soil 5,000 of them slept their last sleep. It it not difficult therefore, to imagine the privations that the poor people of the country endured. And Rachel Wright and her daughter Rebecca soon found that their subsistence must depend upon the gratitude of the general to whom they had rendered such signal service. As soon as Sheridan learned of their circumstances he issued orders for their immediate relief, one of which, still preserved among the papers of Major Griest, who was then issuing commissary on Sheridan's staff, is as follows:

"Capt Griest: Give Miss Wright all the fresh beef she needs.

P. H. SHERIDAN, Major General."

After the war had closed Sheridan further expressed his gratitude by presenting her with a handsome gold watch and chain.

The fact of this presentation became known and the causes that led to it soon leaked out. As a result Miss Wright and her mother were socially ostracised by the pepole of Winchester; their boarding house was tabooed, their means of livelihood disappeared, and they were reduced to even greater distress than during the war. About this time Robert J. Houston heard of Miss Wright's story through James Van Ormer, a Winchester merchant. The account of Miss Wright's heroism during the war, and the condition she was now reduced to by reason of her devotion to the Union in 1868, actuated Mr. Houston to endeavor to lay her case before Thaddeus Stevens in Washington. The old Commoner, however, was even then on his death bed, and Mr. Houston finally approached Senator Simon Cameron, stated to him Miss Wright's case, and suggested that he should secure her a pension.

In reply Senator Simon Cameron said to Mr Houston: "No, I don't think I could get her a pension, and anyhow I am opposed to granting pension to civilians. There were numberless loyal southern people who gave us information during the war. Even when I was secretary of war hundreds of these Southern Unionists sent us intelligence of great value; they did it every day; their claims for pension would be equally strong with that of Miss Wright.

"But there ought to be something done for her. Sheridan ought to marry her, and I'll tell him so, too. He is all-powerful with this administration and he could get her a clerkship easily as not. You leave this matter with me," continued Mr. Cameron, "and when Sheridan gets back to Washington I'll lay the matter before him, and between us we'll see what can be done." Mr. Houston then left, having, as he said, no faith in Cameron's promises, and thinking he only wanted to get rid of me. Six months afterwards the heroine of Winchester was installed as a clerk in the treasury department of the government she had so nobly served.

The salary Miss Wright received was not an extravagant one, but it sufficed to procure for herself and mother, who has since died in Missouri, a comfortable living. Soon an intimacy developed between her and a young Quaker named Bonsall. Marriage followed, she resigning her clerkship, and they settled in the vicinity of Rising Sun, Cecil county, Md., where he was born and raised. There they lived happily until financial distress overtook Mr. Bonsall. Then his energetic wife again secured the clerkship she had resigned and which she holds to this day. Those who saw Mrs Bonsall at the reception recently tendered her by the Grand Army post of Philadelphia could easily believe that she is a woman of firmness and decision of character; but it would be more difficult to convince them that a score of years ago, when fraternal blood was redening the sod of Virginia's ambrosial vale and Sheridan was just entering upon a campaign that would make his namo immortal, this Quaker woman had only reached the 22d year of her age.

Detroit's Eloping Coachman.

The so-called Baron Neiville, the coachman who eloped from Detroit, Mich., with the daughter of C. J. Whitney, has been ascertained to be Charles W. Perry, who resided in Newark in 1883, and who entered into a secret marriage with the only daughter of Charles Rolle, of No 32 Littleton avenue. Perry was a traveling agent for the Prudential insurance company, and became intimate with several respectable families. He was a frequent visitor at Mr. Rolle's house, won the affections of his daughter and demanded her hand in marriage. The parents rejected the proposal, but he persuaded the girl to consent to a clandestine marriage, which was performed by the minister of the DeGroot Methodist church. The young wife returned to her home and Perry went to his boarding-house.

Shortly afterwards a postal card fell into the hands of Mr. Rolle, which satisfied him that Perry had a wife living in Schenectady. His lawyer visited Schenectady and discovered that Perry had married a woman in that city in 1881, under the name of "George H. Percy." Perry had meanwhile gone to Paterson, where he lived with a woman named Harriet Shaw, whom he afterwards introduced as his wife and his sister. Not long after, the lawyer discovered that Perry was living in Peterboro, Canada, with another wife, two children and his mother. He was there as Newbold, which proved to be his correct name. He was convicted of bigamy in Toronto. He made love to the jailer's wife and through her aid escaped. Recently Mr. Rolle's lawyer received a telegram from Mr. Whitney informing him that Neiville had admitted his marriage to Miss Rolle, but claimed that he had obtained a divorce from her. The Newark wife will go to Detroit to testify against him

High Death Rate in Russia.

The paucity of medical men in Russia, writes a correspondent, and the habits of the rural population, combine to make the Russian death-Rate the highest in Europe. Excepting the two capitals, where there are many German physicians, there is no district in the Empire sufficiently supplied with doctors. According to the latest returns, the average duration of life in Russia is only twenty-six years. The mortality among infants is frightful. More than 60 per cent. die before they reach their fifth year. Nearly 2,000,000 children perish every pear. Of 8,000,000 boys, only 3,770,000 attain the age of military service—that is to say, their twenty-fifth year; and of these at least 1,000,000 are found by reason of shortness of stature and weakness of body, unfit for military duties.

William Sherman, the heaviest man in Warren county, N. Y., died at Glens Falls, Wednesday. Ten years ago he weighed 500 pounds, but since then has been reduced to 350 pounds. He was the owner of the Sherman House on Lake George.

FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE.

Farm Notes.

A correspondent of the Gardner's Monthly ties newspapers around celery and bleaches it better, easier and cheaper than by earthing up.

One of the first rules for making the finest butter, is to get the cream out of the milk as quick as possible, and then to have the cream in a proper condition for churning in the shortest possible time after it is skimmed. Suppose the milk is skimmed this morning and evening, that cream ought always to be ready for churning to-morrow morning; ready for churning means slightly sour and thick.

Concrete may do very well to make a cistern in a stiff clay soil, but I fear it might not hold firm and might be liable to crumble in a sandy soil. Brick is preferable, and perfectly reliable. Lay them with the ends to the sides of the excavation, and give both the bottom and sides of the cistern two coats of water-lime plaster. Some give only one coat, but this is not so strong and reliable as two coats. My cisterns were made thus fifteen years ago, and have kept perfectly sound to the present day. —Sandila.

The following points favor the setting of small trees;—(1) Small trees have larger roots in proportion; (2) they cost less;(3) expressage of freight is less —expressing small trees is usually cheaper than freighting large ones, and then so much more speedily; (4) less labor handling, digging holes, etc.; (5) less exposed to high winds, which loosen roots and kill many transplanted trees; (6)planters can form heads and train them to their own liking; (7) with good care in say five years they will overtake the common, large-sized trees. Without good care, better not plant any size.

Mr. T. D. Baird mentions, in the American Garden, his course in pursuit of early cabbage. What he says of frequent culture is almost equally true in respect to all hoed crops: "I cultivate my cabbage every few days sometimes until they are nearly ready for market. When insects molest, I apply a sprinkling of soot, if to be had; otherwise, ashes are used. The best remedy against the cabbage worm is to induce quick growth, and if the plants are set out early, they will be more likely to come through unmolested than if planting is deferred till the season is more advanced."

An old Pennsylvania farmer says the simplest and easiest way to prevent birds, small vermin, &c., from pulling up the corn crop after it is planted, is to tar the seed corn. Put the seed into a vessel, and fill it with a solution of copperas water, and then stir either gas or pine tar through, so that all the seed is touched. Then drain off the water, and roll the seed in dry plaster, ashes or superphospate. Plaster is best to dry the corn, and render it facile for dropping or drilling. This is an old method, and it is said neither squirrels nor birds will disturb seed corn treated in that way.

There is a considerable difference between the wild and the cultivated parsnip, though they have the same botanical name (pastinaca sativa), the root of the latter being larger, without branches, softer and more fleshy. The wild parsnip has an acrid taste, and sometimes malignant consequences when eaten; the cultivated assumes the same acrid taste as soon as it begins to grow in spring. According to authorities on the subject, cultivation makes all the difference.

Hints for House Adornment.

Housekeepers usually believe that the great spring renovation is not satisfactory without the addition of "some now thing" to the house. Paint and paper will accomplish a wonderful transformation, and little articles of needlework will give a freshness and grace for the next seasons. Rattan chairs and couches are upholstered in light chintz, giving a summer appearance with comfort.

The Decorator and Furnisher supplies this suggestion for the treatment of walls and ceilings: "A lovely effect is gained by having the walls clear bird's egg blue, with dado and frieze a rich dark blue, while the woodwork is a dull Indian red in two shades, or the walls a pale yellow, with dada and frieze a rich orange yellow. A low-toned Antwerp blue and warm gray an woodwork is harmonious, while Pompeian red and dado, and light red frieze, with salmon-colored walls and two shades of bronze green with dark red in grooves on woodwork, presents an elegant appearance."

A mistake is often made by selecting carpets of the same color as the paper. A contrast is preferable.

At the spring fairs embroidery has been displayed with taste, and, alas, sometimes with want of taste. That any one in these days of art work should produce a green tidy worked with an inharmonious blue ribbon seems almost incredible, that some one else should elaborately embroider a large, bright pink perfume bag with yellow flowers is also mysterious, but such evil deeds and others like them are constantly obtruding themselves before public notice. Perhaps they are more noticeable because they are rare.

The crazy quilt mania still rages, but with less intensity. "If you could see my especial beautiful quilt," the needle-workers exclaim, "you would not say that the making of it was time wasted." The search for silk pieces and peculiar stitches still continues. Each silk square must be surrounded with a different variety of fancy stitch, and when the quilt is composed of one hundred squares the ninety-ninth stitch is often difficult to find. Aprons are also made in the crazy quilt style, depending in their effect upon the ingenuity of the maker. Plush balls are used to edge these aprons.

A pretty idea for the lining of bureau drawers is a scent bag of quilted pink or blue silk. Over the quilted lining is a covering of pineapple silk, embroidered with branches of daisies or violets and edged with white lace. Bows of satin ribbon are placed at two of the corners.

A toilet set made of silk covered with the delicate cream pineapple silk is uniqe. It is embroidered with daisies in ribbon. Tidies, d'oyleys and mats are fancifully embroidered with the flowers that are in season during the different months—violets, pansies or the laburum for spring, roses and forget-me-nots in summer, the sunflower and dahlias in autumn, and in winter barberries and Virginia creeper leaves. Fringed scarfs are said to be fashionable for mantels in small rooms instead of lambrequins, but the most satisfactory coverings are lambrequins, not cut to fit the mantel at the corners but thrown over the shelf like a scarf.

Scrap baskets are now painted with wild roses and other blossoms. If ribbon is used in trimming, brown, and orange, blue in different shades, garnet and blue, are popular combinations. A deep frill of velvet is sometimes placed around the top of the basket.

Helpful Hints.

Wormwood and pennyroyal are obnoxious to ants.

Hard-shelled lobsters are preferable to soft-shelled.

Ladies with oily skins may use a few drops of camphor in the bath.

Powdered charcoal is excellent in cleansing and sweetening bottles.

Damask napkins having the corner turned down and an initial worked upon it are quite the style.

A correspondent writes that an efficacious remedy for slight burns is to glaze the surface immediately with hard soap.

Cream will whip more easily if kept cold. The vessel containing it should be placed in a pan of ice.

Heat dissipates flavors, therefore it is better to use extracts after the food cools.

For the benefit of those that have rags to weave into carpets a correspondent writes that Mrs. Lena D. Chillson of Perkinsville, Windsor county, Vt., weaves carpets for fourteen cents per yard; also frocking, flannel, etc.

Remarkable Success in Feeding.

There are few farmers in New-England better known than Mr. A. Davison, of Craftsbury, Vt., as he is a dealer in cattle, and every year buys from 1,000 to 2,500 head here in the north and sells them south in Massachusetts and Connecticut. Last November at his farm, in the care of his son, he had eight grade Durham steer calves, about eight months old that weighed about 550 pounds each, and one native steer of the same weight. These calves were tied in a good stable with chains about their necks and watered regularly; and if the day was sunny allowed to stay out a little while. They were fed hay of rather poor quality and each day fed two quarts of white middlings from wheat and one quart of corn-and-cob meal until March 1, when good corn meal was substituted for the cob meal. The result is, this spring, before May 1, the Durham grade calves weigh 1,000 pounds each and are sold for $55 each or $110 per pair as they are mated. The native steer with the same care and feed only weigs 750. The winter rate of gain is indicated by one pair that gained 200 pounds in forty days.

What is remarkable is that thousands of calves are raised in Northern Vermont and sold because they are thought unprofitable stock to winter. What are wintered sell in spring for from $10 to $15, often for less; with this addition of meal these yearlings sold at a price similar to good three-year-olds or ordinary four-year-olds. The quantity and combination of meal was dictated by Mr. Davison's best judgment and long experience. Fastening with chains seems conducive to comfort, therefore to growth. The droppings of cattle is a sure index of their thrift. If the excrement is dry and the animal costive it cannot thrive, and a too lax condition of the bowels is also a bad indication. The result of this experiment is in harmony with the lesson of the Chicago Fat Stock Show, that the cheapest beef is fattened early and continuously. Also it indicates that Durham grades are preferable to native calves as feeders. I do not know of an instance of more successful feeding in Vermont. One or two calves are often extra, but here eight were selected, and it is feed and breed that give such a uniform good result and a large profit on liberal feed ing.—Z. E. Jameson, Orleans Co., Vt.

Improvement of Stock.

The improvement of stock may seemingly be an expensive matter, but if we will but notice that improvement is simply an investment which never fails to return a large dividend, there will be less hesitation on the part of those who do not readily adopt new methods in the matter of breeding stock.

Nature has wisely ordained that the male reproduce itsels at will, while the female, though capable of reproduction, is restricted to periods and limits. The former, therefore, is thus enabled to improve every herd and flock on his farm through the agency of the males, an advantage which permits him to confine himself to improvement without the assistance of thoroughbred females, which would entail heavy expense on those who make stock-raising in large numbers a speciality, but as the male transmits its qualities to its offspring almost unerringly, the character of a head or flock is completely changed in a few years. Take any herd of common stock, for instance cattle, and there will be no uniformity of color, size or shape. By the introduction of a thoroughbred bull, the succeeding generation which will be half-breeds, will show all the advantages of the cross in their improved appearances, quicker growth, and possession of superior traits for the dairy or the shambles. The improvement being carried further, the three-quarters bred animals will be uniform in general markings, color and points, thus making the herd more attractive, as well as further increasing their power of production.

As there is no possible limit to improvement, there should be no reason for even the toleration or existence of scrub stock. Through the male line, may be made changes of structure in a few seasons so valuable and important as to enhance the price of all the stock on the farm, often the venture of an investment in a thoroughbred male being a turning step from loss to profit.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

Bright Side of Farming.

There is a brigh side of farming which every farmer ought to recognize and which more than balances its unpleasant features. While it is true that much farm work is laborious and unpleasant, it is also true that farmers may enjoy ample time for rest, and without financial loss. The work of the farm requires more muscular exertion than that of the shop or desk, but it is less confining and monotonous. The clerk, book-keeper and mechanic work more hours a day, and are more closely confined than the average farm hand, who has his evenings for himself.

The winter months, with their long evenings, afford to the farmer comparative leisure and ample time for recreation, amusement and intellectual culture. They afford opportunity for reading and study, and for laying plans for future work and improvement.

The luscious fruits, fresh vegetables, pure, rich milk and golden butter, which are looked upon by the wealthy residents of cities as luxuries, come to the farmer directly from nature and at little expense. The same articles are bought by city people at extravagant prices, after they have lost their freshness and most desirable qualities. It is unfortunate that farmers do not, as a rule, better appreciate nature's gifts. The farmer deals directly with nature, and the blessings which he should appreciate and enjoy, more than counteract the difficulties and disappointments which fall in his path.

There is no reason why farmers may not lead happy lives. Ambition, if carried too far, becomes a misfortune, and excludes contentment and enjoyment. But with an aim to live and to enjoy, rather than to accumulate fortunes, there is no calling better adapted to comfort, contentment and real happiness than agriculture.—Country Gentleman.

Blind Staggers.

The disease known as "blind staggers" or the "trembles" is caused by disorder of the brain produced by indigestion and disordered stomach or liver or both. It is the same in cows as in horses. Probably the cow has stopped chewing the cud, which is a certain indication of indigestion. Give her a pint of linseed oil; repeat the second day, and also give her a bran mash with a tablespoonful of carbonate of soda in it every day for a week. Feed lightly for a week or two and gradually get up to full feeding. This is caused by overfeeding—giving too much grain food or feeding on frozen grass, moldy corn fodder or other indigestible food. If the oil does not effect the bowels freely give twenty-four ounces of epsom solts dissolved in warm water, followed by drinks of thin warm bran sled or linseed gruel; this will relieve the stomach if impaction of the undigested food in it has occurred. This disorder affects the whole nervous system, and one of its first effects is to stop the flow of milk.

Lima Beans.

A correspondent of the Farm and Garden has discarded poles in growing lima beans. A liberal supply of manure is placed in deep furrows, mixed thoroughly with the soil, and seed dropped every four inches in rows three and a half feet apart. When well up the plants are bushed with heavier stuff than for tall peas. The vines having reached the top of the support, are pinched in, which repression results to the advantage of the crop. By this method he gets a larger product from a given space than in the old way, and has a smaller surface to hoe.

The best writers on poultry matters give great prominence to warmth for the young of all kinds of fowls, and we know by experience that it is very important. We have often saved young chickens and turkeys that had got chilled, and were apparently lifeless, by dipping them into a dish of warm water and wrapping them in warm flannel till they were dry. Warm water penetrates the feathers at once and warms the body, while it would take a long time to warm through the cold, wet feathers by dry heat.

Origin of the Smithsonian Institution.

The Smithsonian Institution received its name from James Smithson, an English physicist, who at his death bequeathed his nephew £120,000, the whole of his property, which in case the nephew died without issue, was to go to the Government of the United States to found at Washington an institution for the diffusion of knowledge. The bequest took effect by the death of the nephew in 1735, and the Hon. Richard Rush was sent to London to prosecute the claim. In 1838 he deposited in the United States Mint the proceeds, amounting to $515,169. The act of 1846 appropriated the interest from September 1, 1838 when the money was received, to July 1,1846, amounting to $242,129, for the erection of buildings and other current incidental expenses, and provided that all future expenditures and appropriations be made exclusively from accruing interest and not from the principal of the fund. It is also declared the original fund to be lent in perpetuity to the treasury of the United States at 6 per cent., payable semi-annually.

Smoke of the Late Fires.

When the high winds first brought in the dense volumes of smoke sent forth by the forest fires in the Catskills and the Jersey woods, no small degree of alarm was felt by many in New York and other cities and towns about this part of the Atlantic shores. It was feared that an immense conflagration was under way either in New York or Jersey City, and the atmosphere was singularly suggestive of the dark hours of the Chicago fire. Every part of the horizon was befogged with the penetrating smoke, and the smell of burning timber was oppressive. The sun set as a disk of brass and the moon rose with facial evidences of being unusually "full." The true cause of the smudge was eagerly sought for by the press and public, and great relief was experienced in knowing that it was the burning of nature's instead of man's temples.

Ferdinand Ward, of the defunct New York firm of Grant & Ward, who has led General Grant and his sons into their financial ruin, is a slightly-built man, about 38 years old. He is five feet ten inches tall, and wears a small light mustache. His nose is prominent, and he has a sallow complexion. His father is a minister at Geneseo, N. Y.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Farming Paragraphs.

Mrs. A. Bradish, Fredonia, N. Y., reports an asparagus bed "at least seventy years old," and still yielding abundantly.

A doctor who has investigated cases of poisoning by canned provisions, reports that they were due to "muriate of zinc and muriate of tin," and that use of this "dangerous amalgam must be abandoned."

It is said that the number of horses in the United States is now over 11,000,000. Two-thirds of these are draft or general purpose horses and one-third are used for pleasure driving.

If garden seeds, when planted in the spring, are firmly pressed when under the earth by the ball of the foot they will almost invariably grow, drought or no drought, and, what is just as important, they will spring up earlier and grow faster than any of their kind which have not received the same treatment.

If troubled with cut-worms, don't neglect to roll a piece of paper (any kind will answer) about the stems of the tomato and cabbage plants when setting them in the open ground. No string is required to hold the paper. Merely secure the lower part by pressing soil upon it about the stem. This is so quickly done that it is well worth while, even when planting in fields, if the cut-worm abounds.

In setting cabbage plants, it is better to pull or cut off all of the large leaves, leaving all of the central ones. The outer leaves are of no service to the young plant, for the reason that the roots cannot supply them with moisture, so that they wilt and die. In an experiment, made several years ago, we secured a better stand from plants so treated than from those which were set with their leaves entire, as they were taken from the seed bed.

The National Stockman thinks there are few if any industries that are more promising at the present time than breeding and raising horses. There is no danger whatever of an over-supply, and prices have held firmer for the past five years on horses than on any other class of live stock, that is for anything like first-class animals. The horse of any merit, if placed upon the market now, need not wait long for a buyer at a good round price. Nothing need stand in the way of any farmer making his horse stock yield him a good income each year if the matter is properly handled. One advantage in having an income from a source like this is that the time when horses sell the best and when they naturally come into the market is in the spring of the year, just the time when farmers need the money the worst, and when they generally have but little of the products of the farm to sell. A few young horses can be ready for the market each spring with but little cost.

The Temperature of Milk Rooms.

From the Cultivator.

Cream will rise perfectly if the temperature is right. There is a difference in the rising of cream in shallow pans and in deep pails at the same temperature. When milk is set in the shallow pans at a lower temperature than 55 degrees, the cream rises slowly and imperfectly; if the temperature is over 62 degrees the milk will sour before all the cream separates from it. It is, therefore, a custom in many dairies to set the milk pans in a shallow stream of running water in the summer time to keep the temperature down to 60 degrees or a little under. This is an excellent arrangement, and no heating or any preliminary process is required. A brick or stone milk house is better than a wooden one, but only because the dampness will encourage mold and decay of the timber. A hollow wall is not necessary, as while the cool water is flowing around the milk a warmer atmosphere in contact with the cream is beneficial rather than otherwise.

But if deep cans are used (20 inches), the circumstances are wholly different. For some reasons, not certainly known as yet, the cream rises so slowly through a deep mass of milk that this will sour before the cream separates, and the cream is then entangled in the milk and lost. If the milk is set at about 45 degrees, all the cream can be raised perfectly in twelve hours. As there are no running streams and very few springs so cool as this, this system of setting cannot be used under the circumstances above mentioned, and only shallow pans must be used. The Pennsylvania dairies of the best class often use red earthenware pots, glazed inside, about eight inches deep and ten inches in diameter on the top, for setting the milk in cool running water. This plan is also common in the best dairies in Normandy, France, which are noted for fine butter. The milk is never heated, excepting when very thick or "clouded" cream is desired for special purposes; it is wholly unnecessary in ordinary dairying.

Try Thorough Farming.

T. B. Terry in the Cultivator.

I want to propose to you, brother farmers, that you take one lot on your farm and begin now to do on it the very best farming you possibly can. Keep an exact account with it, and just see what net profit it will pay you. Charge for all seed and labor what it is worth, or what it costs you, and charge for all the manure put on; dividing the cost fairly between each crop in the rotation and interest on the value of the land, and on the cost of all permanent improvements, such as underdraining, clearing off the stones, etc. Take one of your best lots, clear it of all obstructions, and underdrain every wet spot. If it all needs draining, drain it all. Get the best tools in the market for thoroughly working and pulverizing the soil, and then use them without stint. Manure your land if it needs it, and do not forget to pulverize the manure. Put in the crops best suited to your locality. Select a good rotation; the one best suited to your soil and crops. Do everything just when it ought to be done. Get the best of seed, and put the products of your land into nicest possible shape for market. If you do all this honestly and faithfully, I think you will be surprised, before you get around once with your rotation, at the profit of such farming. You will not go back to the old way after having once tried this kind of farming, nor will you need to be urged to try it on another lot.

I am speaking of improvement in tillage, but of course with this you want other improvements, such as improved breeds of cattle, sheep and swine to which to feed your products. If you have not the capital to do all this, sell a part of your land and get it. If you have 200 or 300 acres of land, and are "just about making a living" from it, sell half and make more money with less worry from the other half. If you have but little land, and are in debt for that, why then you must start in a small way, but start all the same, and, if you are faithful, it will be the surest way to get out of debt.

Receipts for Strawberries.

Mrs. Lincoln's Boston Cook Book, which has been recently published is admirably conceived and carried out. As the strawberry season is at hand, a few of her ideas regarding the disposal of the delicious berry might be timely.

STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE.—One pint sifted flour, ½ teaspoonful salt, scant, ½ teaspoonful soda, measured after pulverising, 1 full teaspoonful cream of tartar (omit if sour milk be used,) mixed together and sift two or three times, ¼ cup butter, 1 cup butter, or melt the butter and add it hot with the milk, gradually, mixing and cutting with a knife, and use just enough to make it light, spongy, consistency. Either bake on a griddle or in the oven. When baked tear open and spread each half of the cakes with softened butter. Put half of the cakes on a hot plate. Mash a pint of strawberries, sweeten to taste, put in a large spoonful on each cake; then put another layer of cakes, and whole berries, well sugared. Serve with cream.

A favorite variety of shortcake, not given by Mrs. Lincoln, is that served at the Adams House. A Washington pie is filled with whole strawberries, held together by the beaten whites of eggs and sugar.

TO SERVE STRAWBERRIES.—Strawberries, if gritty, should be rinsed and drained, then hulled and not sweetened till served with the stems on. Pass sugar with them, that those who prefer may roll them in it.

STRAWBERRY SHERBET.—One pint berry juice, 1 pint sugar, 1 pint water, juice 2 lemons, 1 tablespoonful gelatine. Or, 1 pint preserved fruit, 1 cup sugar, 1 quart water, 2 lemons, tablespoonful gelatine.

STRAWBERRY CHARLOTTE.—Line a bowl with strawberries and fill with Bavarian cream. The cream is made of ½ box gelatine, ½ cup cold water soaked together. Whip 1 pint of cream till you have three pints of the whip. Boil the remainder with ½ cup of sugar, and when boiling add the gelatine. Add 1 teaspoonful vanilla. When the mixture is cold add whipped cream.

STRAWBERRY ICE CREAM.—Sprinkle sugar over the berries; mash and rub through a fine sieve. Measure the juice, and use 1 pint of juice to 2 quarts of cream or custard. Add more sugar as the berries require.

Economy in the Family.

A man must ask his wife's premission, if he wishes to become rich. He must have his wife's aid, if he is to practise those economies in the family which may lay the foundation of his subsequent wealth. The New York Christian Advocate makes the following suggestion to young men with families to support:

A hundred dollars a year saved in rent is worth the trouble, and may become the foundation of comfort at a time when it is needed.

He who saves one hundred dollars on his rent is simply being paid that much for the little inconveniences he may have to endure.

Solid and plain furniture, with the ornaments such as a wife's taste can make with a very little expense, should be obtained in distinction from lumbering up the house with expensive articles.

Every article of furniture that is not necessary in a room diminishes its size and the air capacity, and collects dust and makes work.

Economy can be practised upon the table, by the co-operation of husband and wife, so as to make a difference of one-half in the expenses.

Dainties, preserves, fruits in advance of the season, too much meat, excess and profusion of all kinds, take money.

Being in the habit, some years since, of visiting a young family whose table always had everything that was needed and nothing more, but with freshness and sufficient variety, and knowing that the young man had a very small income, I asked him what his table expenses per annum amounted to.

Said he, "Guess." I put them at seven hundred dollars, which I thought was very low for the city in which he lived, and the way in which he appeared to live.

His reply was, "Last year my expenses were four hundred and eight dollars for the table."

"How do you do it?" said I.

He replied, "My wife and I apply the same thought and study to our purchases for the table that a business man applies to the purchase of the goods that he deals in, and expects to make a living from."

This illustration is drawn from the life of a man whose income was perhaps one thousand eight hundred dollars per year, and who lived in a quite expensive part of a large city.

The same principle can be applied whether the income be more or less. What was said upon the subject of clothes under the former head can be applied to the whole household.

Presents and extras need to be narrowly watched. Superfluous gifts to children, expenditures for candy, and for trips that do not give pleasure in proportion to their cost, are leaks which keep many well-meaning families poor.

Avoid Useless Apologies.

"We were poor enough in those days," said an eminent publicist, once, in talking to a friend about his early married life, with its hard struggles, its plain living and high thinking. "We were poor enough, and we lived a good deal on baked beans with no pork.

"Some folks didn't like beans with no pork to season them; but 'mother'" (mother meant his wife) "never made any apologies. When company came, she put on an extra plate, and said dinner was ready, just as cheerfully as if there had been ten courses.

"If they liked us well enough to come again, they were always welcome. It was a kind of test. If they preferred pork, they stayed where it was plenty."

To our thinking this frugal housewife proved her claim to be considered a lady more conclusively by making no apologies than she could have done in almost any other way. Does the chronic apologizer ever stop to think how selfish she is, in considering the petty annoyance of being in this or that direction less perfectly appointed than she could wish, rather than the ease and comfort of her guest?

For what guest can be at ease having been made to feel that he has come at an inopportune time—that some other day his hostess would have been more ready and therefore more glad to see him?

A lady well-known to the society of two cities is a chronic maker of excuses. If you go to a large dinner-party at her house, you feel by some spiritual magnetism the unrest of her own spirit—the wearing anxiety lest everything should not go off well which makes it impossible for her to be quite at her ease.

"I beg your pardon," she says, at the end of your prettiest speech, showing that her thoughts have been otherwhere.

If you go to a family lunch or dinner, she does wish you had been there yesterday, when the soup was better, or that you had come to-morrow, instead, when some other dainty would have been attainable.

"Do you go often to see Mrs. So-and-So?" one friend asked of another in our hearing.

"No, I don't," was the answer, "I'm sorry, too; she is such a kind little woman; but I could not stand her apologies. They always make me feel that I had come at the wrong time."

If the thought could be present to a hostess that to apologize profusely is, inevitably, to make her guests feel that they have come "at the wrong time," surely she would avoid this error, since the very essence of good-breeding is that genuine kindness of heart which strives to make people comfortable and not uncomfortable, happy and not unhappy.

Leghorn Hats and Bonnets.

When the milliner takes one of the old-fashioned flats in hand it seems as though nothing very "taking" could be made of it, but with a new arrangement of the rim they are lovely. Half of the broad rim is cut loose from the crown, from front to back, and then turned over the crown as far as it will go. The brimless side is filled out with plumes and tips and lace, while the two brims that curve over each other are filled in with a ruche of narrow satin ribbon loops and lined with lace. The brims droop one above the other like the petals of a wild rose half open. This is an exceedingly dressy and novel style, it is more or less introduced into other shapes. A bonnet for instance is made by cutting the back and turning the brims both front. Then the back is finished with full frills of lace or the plumes allowed to curl over concealing it in part.

The drooping shade hat, always needed in the country, comes in pretty, graceful shapes, but most crowns are high and many of them very small. The colors selected for general wear are gray, ecru and black, but a harmony is sought between the hat or bonnet and the several costumes of which it is a part.

MATCH-MAKING IN ITALY.

How the Young Girls in a Great Hospital are Provided With Husbands.

Palermo Letter in London Times.

The long dormitories of the hospital were clean and orderly, but the curious and peculiar feature of this establishment was the parlitorio or reception-room. Picture a large, long room, the greater portion of which is divided off from the sides and farther end by an iron grating, which forms a cage, entered only by a well-barred street door, through which visitors from the outer world are admitted. Here the inmates sit on benches to converse with those on the other side of the iron grating. Once a week, however, Sunday mornings from 10 to 12, this place is the scene of the most novel and ludicrous courtships ever described. One of the objects of this motherly establishments is to find fit and proper husbands for the girls under its charge. The fit and proper here is much like the fit and proper of society—the one requisite being that the young man is bound to show himself in possession of sufficient means to maintain a wife in comfort before he is allowed to aspire to the hand of one of those precious damsels.

Having given in his credentials of fitness to the guardian, he receives a card which admits him next Sunday morning to an inspection of the candidate for matrimony. There, sitting on a bench, if his curiosity and ardor will allow him to remain sitting, he awaits the arrival on the other side of the grating of the Lady Superior, accompanied by the girl. She had been selected by order of seniority and capacity for household work from the hundred or more between 17 and 21, waiting for a youth to deliver them from their prison. The young people, both, no doubt, breathless with agitation at the importance of the ceremony, have to take one long, fixed look at each other. No word is spoken, no sign is made. These good sisters believe so fully in the language of the eye that, in their minds, any addition is futile, and might but serve to mystify the pure and perfect effect of love at first sight.

The look over, the Lady Superior asks the man if he accept the maiden as his bride. Should the answer be in the affirmative, the same question is put to her, and if she bows assent, the betrothal has taken place, and they part till the Sunday following. The young lover again makes his appearance before the tribunal of guardians, and there the contract is signed, the day of marriage fixed, and he granted leave to bring the ring, earrings and wedding dress, and present them—through the gridiron, of course—to the betrothed. Everything has to pass the scrutiny of the Sisters for fear of a letter or some tender word being slipped in with the gifts. During the few Sundays that intervene between the first love scene and the marriage an hour's conversation within the hearing of the Lady Superior is allowed, but not a touch is exchanged. The empty talk, interspersed with a giggle, consists of inquiries as to the wedding dress and the occupation and place of abode of the suitor. Should the young man refuse the first damsel presented to him he is favored with the sight of three more, but should he still appear difficile, he is dismissed. The girl also has the power of refusal.

WALKING MATCH HORRORS.

The Terrible Countenances of the Contestants at New York.

New York letter: The horrors in the crypt at the Eden Musee were as nothing compared with the faces of the so-called racers in the six days' walk. They have in the chamber of horrors in this museum various wax faces illustrating more or less agony. One is the face of a Moor whose head has just been chopped off by an executioner. Another is the face of a man who is being scalped. Another is the face and head of a victim who is being roasted alive by the cannibals. All of these faces are sufficiently horrible but they are not a marker to the faces of six day pedestrians, after they have been on the track for three days.

Fitzgerald's face—unshaven, uncouth, distorted and ungainly, withered by the tremendous strain and lined like a cobweb—was a more repulsive sight during the last three days of the match than anything in the Eden Musee. His eyes were sluggish, bloodshot and heavy and encompassed by huge purple circles. His cheeks had so sunk in that the contour of the teeth could almost have been seen through them and every movement was an illustration of acute agony. He swung his arms painfully, his head dropped on his chest, his shoulder blades stuck out sharply from his atenuated body, his legs dragged lamely one after the other and the muscles of his neck twiched nervously at every step. He dragged himself steadfastly ahead, never turning his eyes to the right or left, until he came to the scorer's stand, when he painfully and laboriously turned his face toward the figures to see that they were correctly given.

Charles Rowell was even more pronounced and if possible a bit more pitiable. At the start he was as handsome, chunky, well-fed and athletic specimen of a man as one could desire to see. He was trained down perfectly. His eyer were bright, his color good and his muscles superbly developed. He moved gracefully and quickly, and looked like a winner from the start. As the race progressed the color faded from his cheeks, his eyes grew heavy and brow wrinkled until it seemed shriveled. His shoulders drooped and his cheeks fell away untill he was almost unrecognizable. The terrible strain drew his face almost out of proportion and made it repulsive to look upon. These were the two leaders. They were in better condition than any other men in the race.

Night after night and day after day thousands of people poured into the garden and hung for hours over the rail staring at the faces of the poor wretches who were dragging themselves around the track. There seemed to be a sort of morbid fascination in it for the crowd. A man would get a position along the rail where he could see the walkers for an instant as they passed on their rounds. Here he would stand for five or six hours in the stifling atmosphere, pushed and jostled by the crowd, just for the chance of catching a glimpse of the faces of the toiling pedestrians as they came around the track. Everybody who came in exclaimed at the revolting appearance of the men, and then crowded eagerly for a place where they could catch a closer view of them. All this has been written many times before, but one couldn't visit the six days' walking horror without being duly impressed by it. What is there in the nature of sport in a six days' walking match? One can understand the admiration the people feel for a well contested and swift running, or boat, race, a good game of base ball, a scientific sparring match, or a rattling game of tennis, racquets, lacrosse, foot ball or cricket. In all of these a man needs endurance, pluck and science. Nobody is injured, constitutions are not wrecked, and the contestants do not pass through a period of prolonged and terrible suffering as they do in one of the lengthy contests of the Madison square garden.

The Test of Friendship.

Henry Ward Beecher preached a remarkable sermon last Sunday. His text was Galatians, vi. 1-2:

Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou also be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ.

In the course of the sermon he said: I think Gen. Grant one of the most magnanimous men that we have ever had in public life, and I was very much struck with an instance of it. When Conkling precipitated himself from the senate it was very much against Gen. Grant's judgment, and that was known, and he attempted in every way to be friendly to Mr. Conkling and shield him to such an extent that everybody thought he was on his side, and a man expostulated with him, and said:

"Gen. Grant, how is it? You do not believe that he did right?"

"No, sir; I don't."

"How is it, then, you are on his side now?"

His reply is worthy to be written in letters of gold:

"When is the time to show a man's self friendly except when his friend has made a mistake?"

That is not the time to leave a man, when he has made a mistake. [Applause.] That is one of those moral principals that addresses itself to the universal conscience. Stand by him in his adversity, if you don't stand by him at any other time. A large sense, I think, of the fallibleness of human nature is indispensable to charity. She is a beautiful creature, and she has been daintily brought up. He is also a genius, and when they meet she sees a saint and he sees an angel. [Laughter.] After they are united, she has a pride and he has a pride. She has selfishness and he has a selfishness. They begin to discover each other's faults. That very soon leads to words, and words lead to the repetition of words, and the music stops. [Laughter.] Now, it is best when folks are courting that they should find out faults beforehand, because these troubles would not be so likely to befall. When you marry as sinners, you are much more likely to live as saints, than when you marry as saints and find out you are sinners. Friendship ought to be founded on the doctrine of total depravity. Then every excellence is just so much more than you supposed and is clear gain. Friendship that is good for anything must take the friend and all his faults too. True friendship says, "I love them to that degree that I would rather have them with all their faults than anybody else with all their virtues." There is no disposition which strikes at the very roots of Christianity like unlovingness. When you are sending out poisoned words, when you are creating suffering without any moral aim, and without any restorative tendency, merely in the exercise of your inferior nature, does not God take the side of those whom you are wronging? Beware, for God is the guardian of those who suffer. Tears are arguments that never plead in vain. "I say unto you, love your enemies. Bless them that curse you, for if you love them that love you what reward have ye. Be ye, therefore, perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." That is the creed for you, for on one side is an infidel and on the other side a christian.

CIVILIZED VANDALS.

How the Fernandina English Armies Looted the Pekin Summer Palace.

From the London Tablet.

Present at the taking of Pekin by the allied French and English forces, on the 11th of October, 1860, Gordon gives a graphic account of the destruction of the Summer Palace, the fabulous glories of which every traveler in the far east has so many times heard of. The city itself had surrendered and been spared, but it was resolved that the great palace should be razed as "warning to all time."

"We went out," writes Gordon to a friend, "and after pillaging it, burned the whole place destroying in a vandal-like manner most valuable property, which could not be replaced for four millions. We got upward of £48 apiece prize-money before we went out here; and although I have not as much as many, I have done well. Imagine D—— giving 16s. for a string of pearls which he sold the next day for £500. The people are civil, but I think the grandees hate us, as they must after what we did to the palace. You can scarcely imagine the beauty and magnificence of the places we burnt. It made one's heart sore to burn them; in fact, these palaces were so large, and we were so pressed for time, that we could not plunder them carefully. Quantities of gold ornaments were burned, considered as brass. It was wretchedly demoralizing work for an army. Everybody was wild for plunder. You would scarcely conceive the magnificence of this residence, or the tremendous devastation the French have committed. The throne and room were lined with ebony, carved in a marvelous way. There were huge mirrors of all shapes and kinds, clocks, watches, musical boxes with puppets on them, magnificent china of every description, heaps and heaps of silk of all colors, embroidery, and as much splender and civilization as you would see at Windsor; carved ivory screens, coral screens, large amounts of treasure, etc. The French have smashed everything in the most wanton way. It was a scene of utter destruction which passes my description."

"Baggage-Smashers."

The way certain railroad men handle the trunks of travelers is sometimes shocking to the most indifferent spectator, and has earned for them the familiar name of "baggage-smashers."

A few years ago one of these men tumbled a long peculiar-looking box from the porter's truck into a baggage-car at the Old Colony depot in Boston, and stood it on end in the usual rough fashion, when a stifled voice cried,—

"Oh, don't!"

"Don't what?" said the astonished "smasher," staring at the box.

"Don't stand me on my head! Turn me over quick," said the voice.

The excited baggage-man hurriedly placed the box in a horizontal position, when the voice, more stifled than before, called out,—

"That won't do! You've put me on my face! Oh! Oh!"

The bagger-man hastened to turn the box over, and was awarded by a grunt of satisfaction by the voice. Then turning to the owner—a quick-looking little man standing by—he exclaimed, wiping the sweat from his forehead,—

"Look here! You must pay fare for this boy in the box!"

"Oh no" said the owner. "I have carried him thousands of miles on railroads, and have never paid his fare yet."

"No matter," said the baggage-man. "You can't smuggle nobody over this line; and if you don't fork over, I'll set him out on the platform, and leave him standing on his head, till you do!"

"Why sir, he's a dead-head! the conductor has passed him many a time," remonstrated the traveller.

"We don't dead-head no live folks in boxes!" said the smasher; and he was about to tumble the box out, when the conductor himself came along, and recognizing the traveller, inquired,—

"What's the trouble, Signor Blitz?"

It was, in fact, Blitz the ventriloquist; and the occupant of the box was no other than his automaton "boy," Bobby, that figured in his performances, and always travelled as a "dead-head" in this way.

Two More Dakota Justices.

The house on Saturday the 17th, passed Delegate Raymond's bill providing for two additional associate justices for the Territory of Dakota and the establishment of two additional districts, making six judicial districts in all. The new Fifth district is composed of the counties of Brookings, Kingsbury, Beadle, Deuel, Hamlin, Grant, Codington, Clark, Day, Spink, Brown, Hand, Hyde, Hughes, Sully, Edmunds, Faulk, McPherson, Potter, Campbell, Roberts and Walworth and the Sisseton and Wappeton Indian reservations.

"And the Second and the fourth district," reads the bill, "shall consist of the remainder of the territory which now constitutes said Second district, and Fourth district, respectively, as defined by the statutes of said territory. The Sixth district is composed of the counties of Bowman, Villard, Billings, Dunn, Mackenzie, Alfred, Buford, Flannery, Walker, Montraille, Williams, Stark, Hatinger, Morton, Mercer, McLean, Stevens, Renville, Winn, Bottineau, McHenry, Sheridan, Burleigh, Emmons, Macintosh, Logan, Kidder, Wells, Desna, Rolette, Towner, Benson, Foster, Stutsman, La Moure, Dickey, Griggs, Steele and Barnes. The Sixth district court is a United States court, with quarters at Bismarck. Two terms are to be held there annually.

This arrangement of the district is to stand until changed by the legislature.

Consumption in its Early Stages.

To a very large extent consumption is a hereditary disease, either as directly propagated in its germ or taint, or as engrafted on a constitution too feeble to resist attacks from without. It is not a local disease, like yellow fever, nor an occasional one, like cholera; nor is it confined to a certain period of life. Its deadly work is going on always and everywhere from infancy to old age. Few others compare with it in fatality. It may mock its victims with hope to the last, but its grasp, once fully fixed, is, in the majority of cases, relaxed only in death.

Shall we then give up to it in despair? By no means. It is an established fact that it can be cured in its earlier stage. Post-mortems reveal multitudes of healed and scarred lungs—probably self-cured—in persons who have died of other diseases; and medical history records many similar cures, the result of well-directed treatment.

The condition out of which consumption is developed is always one of feebleness. Our only hope is in physical invigoration.

Says a distinguished British authority, "If we ask what treatment is attended by the best results, the experience both of the past and the present will, I think, unhesitatingly reply that which has for its object the improvement of every means possible of the general health. The most important indication in the treatment of this disease has been in the past, and probably will be in the future, to endeavor, by means of good hygiene, good food and suitable remedies, to promote and maintain, as far as possible, that normal performance of the digestive and assimilative processes which is essential to healthy nutrition."

The requisites to this end are rest from one's usual occupation; change of surroundings; out-door exercise and a nutritious diet of easy digestion. Fat, which is so desirable, should be taken in the form of butter, cream, eggs, bacon, etc. To relieve the fatigue of the early morning cough, and to promote expectoration, warm tea or chocolate, with plenty of milk is good before dressing. At night, to prevent night sweats, give egg and milk, or strong beef-tea, the last thing.

The special arm of the drugs administered should be to invigorate the digestive organs. "I would also say," adds the above author, "take care of themselves." Of course, a skilled physician must direct the details.—Youth's Companion.

Car Wheels of Railroads.

Everything is built to last and do service. Only one thing have I noticed as yet in England or on the continent, that seems less substantial and durable than the corresponding article in the United States. That is the car wheels of railroads. Here I have seen very few that are solid. They are made with rims about two inches thick on the thinner side, surrounded by a flange, and connected with the central part of the wheel with spokes that are themselves not solid iron, but hollow elipses. Even the driving-wheels of the engines are made in this way. And as the railroad carriages and freight cars run apparently on higher bearings, the whole train seems to rest on a more airy and frail basis, and one shrinks at first from entrusting himself to so weak a structure, lest the irregularities of the road should cause the cars to jump the track. But soon he finds that there is no lack of speed, and yet there is great regularity and ease of movement, and the thought occurs to him that it may be quite as safe, as well as great economy in the cost and wear of rolling stock, to have a perfect track, with light wheels. so that there will be no tendency to jump the track, as to have a poorer track and heavy wheels to hold the train down, when otherwise it would be thrown off.—London Letter.

The Order of Trappists.

Writing o fthe trappists at Gethsemane, Ky., a correspondent says: "'When a monk dies no useless coffin incloses his breast,' but, wrapped in his circular, with his cowl drawn over his head as in life, he is buried. Each grave is covered with myrtle and has a black wooden cross bearing the name of the cell's dusty inmate. At the foot of each grave is a little stool, where the father who conducts you kneels to pray for the soul of the departed. At the end of the row is a new, open grave, which will receive the next body, and which constantly helps the father to 'remember death.' There are no qualifications for the Trappists order. Any man who will obey the rules may stay seven years, giving his labor to the community and his thoughts to God, and, if he does not like it then, may withdraw. If he concludes to stay he takes the perpetual vow. The sin-sick and the weary are all here. Few desert, while many have been for years buried to the world and all its little convulsions. Some of them do not know who is president, and the echo of Guiteau's pistol shot died at the outer walls. The abbey contains a fine library of religious works, among which is a Bible printed at Lyons in 1532."

Alligator Skins.

Not many years have passed away since alligator skin was tanned as a novelty. Now, however, it is a necessity, and there are at least a dozen firms in this country engaged exclusively in tanning alligator hides. It has been estimated that 400,000 alligators were killed during 1883 in order to supply the demand for leather. The negroes kill the creatures, and get from twenty to fifty cents each for the skins, according to size and quality. The storekeeper who buys the skin from the negro gets from $1 to $2 for it, making a handsome profit. A skin six feet long is considered the best, but they come in all sizes, from two to eighteen feet.

Adelina Patti was born in Madrid, Spain, April 9, 1843. She first appeared on the stage at New York in the Winter of 1859—'60, before she was 17. Christine Nilsson was born at Hussaly, near Wexio, Sweden, August 2, 1843. Her first appearance in opera was made in October, 1864, at the Theater Lyrique, Paris, in Verdi's "Traviata." Marcella Sembrich was born in Galizia in 1858. Her first appearance in opera was in 1877 at Milan in "I Puritani." Frau Amalia Materna was born St. George, a small market town of Styria, in 1847. Her first success in opera was won at Gratz in Suppe's "Flotte Burschen," when she was 18.

Getting a Furlough.

Mr. Samuel F. Holbrook, late of the United States Navy, gives a racy example (in his book of recollections) of the proper way to get a favor from an official dignitary in buttons and epaulettes. The directions may apply to visits at other headquarters than military and naval. At least it is a sure rule that courtesy, if not allied to insincerity, smooths one's way, and opens doors otherwise impenetrable.

A midshipman just home from a long cruise applied to the commander of the Navy Yard for leave of absence to visit his friends, who resided in Charleston, S. C. The old gentleman gruffly answered, "No, sir, your services are required in the yard."

As the midshipman was passing down to his ship, venting his disappointment audibly, in rather unmeasured terms, he met Mr. P——, the first lieutenant of the yard, to whom he told his trouble.

"Ah," said Mr. P——, "you dont know how to approach the commodore. I'll teach you how to do it, and if you follow my directions, you will surely accomplish your purpose. Just wait a day or two—say till day after to-morrow morning—and then watch when he enters his office, and in a few minutes go in, make a very low bow, say, 'Good-morning, commodore; how is your health this morning? You look charmingly; I have never seen you look better in my life. Does your lady enjoy her usual health?' And then pop the question about your leave."

The young man followed out the suggestion. On the morning appointed he watched the old gentleman as he entered his office, and in a few minutes knocked on the door and was admitted. He made a very handsome bow, and in the most polite manner commenced.

"Good-morning commodore; how is your health this morning, sir? I think I never saw you look so well in your life."

"Exceedingly well, thank you sir."

"And your lady; does she enjoy her usual health?"

"Excellent, excellent; I am obliged to you, sir."

"Commodore, I should feel extremely grateful for a few days' leave to visit my friends."

"Certainly, sir; how much time do you wish?"

"About three weeks, sir."

"Oh, take six, sir, with my best wishes. Will you dine with me to-day, sir, at three o'clock?"

"Thank you, sir. I shall be happy to do myself the honor."

Personal Paragraphs.

George Eliot, after meeting Lord, then Sir Garnet Wolseley, describes him in one of her letters "as one of those men who have the power to command by means of gentleness of character, calmness of bearing, and inflexibility of resolution."

D. O. Mills is another millionaire who has been heavily hit by the decline in stocks. He has been suffering for years from Bright's disease, which has been much aggravated lately by heavy pecuniary losses, and his physicians fear, unless some favorable change occurs, that he may be carried off suddenly.

Alphonso XII. of Spain has insured his life. In an age when crowns, if not crowned heads, topple over this is a wise provision for his heirs.

Signor Sella, the late Italian statesman, would never receive a gift, even from the King. He once declined a snuff box sent him by the Emperor of Austria, and valued at $6,000. He even refused a horse that Victor Emanuel once offered him, saying, laughingly, that he had one already, and that if he accepted this one he would have to sell his own horse to buy food for the other.

Colonel Preston Johnston, a son of General Albert Sidney Johnston, is reported by the Rev. Dr. Henry M. Field as saying of the battle of Shiloh: "When my father was shot, and fell from his horse, he had gained a great victory; and if he had not been killed at that critical moment, in two hours more he would have captured General Grant and his whole army.

One of the teachers in a school in Lawrence, Mass., sent home for an absent pupil recently, and when the boy arrived he gave as an excuse for his tardiness that his aunt—who was alone in the house—had fainted away. An older pupil was sent to the house to learn the condition of the woman, and came back with the startling intelligence that she was dead in her chair. The rest of the family were in the mill.

Old Uncle Frank Juniper, a colored man who lives three miles from Midway, Ky., plowed up a silver box the other day which contained a number of silver dollars, halves and quarters. The box contained about $40 in American and Spanish coins, the one of most recent date bearing the stamp of 1807, showing the money must have been buried about that year or the years following. The most peculiar part of the circumstance is that in the early part of the present century, within a year or two of that date, a remote ancestor of the finder was hanged for murdering a peddler. He made no confession and no trace of the plunder for which the crime was committed was ever found.

The True Cure.

There are two ways of dealing with the evils in the world which we justly deplore and wish to abolish—one is to attack and try to break down forcibly; the other to dissolve or exhale them by the presence of good. The former of these methods appears so much the more direct and obvious that it generally gains the first place in our attention. We see a wrong, and our impulse is to crush it; we see injustice, and we long to exterminate it; we observe an unrighteous institution, and we desire to overthrow it. The slower and less direct method of overcoming evil with good, of substituting a better way for that which is bad, of devoting the same energy to building up that we would have given to the work of tearing down, obtains a gradual hold over us only with time and experience.

California estimates of growing wheat and barley this year are—wheat 57,000,000 bushels; barley, 24,000,000 bushels —with 1,500,000 tons of wheat for export.

General Grant resigned his commission to become president. The bill now before congress and which passed the senate provides for his appointment on the retired list of the army, with the rank and pay of general in the army.

Since the failure of the tariff bill congress has manifested but little inclination for business, and it is probable that little will be done this session beyond the passage of the appropriation bills. All the members of congress are politicians, most of them candidates for re-election, and hence the apparent indifference to anything that does not immediately concern themselves.

The man who is not in debt beyond his means of speedy liquidation, or who has his money invested in property or in legitimate business enterprise, need not bother himself about the turmoil in Wall street. Even if he is a holder of the stocks of a good corporation as long as the dividends come promptly it need make no difference to him if the nominal price is depressed. If the value is there it is sure to be reorganized when the excitement is over.

A cable from London says: "Lord Aylesford, the Texas cattle king, has just arrived in London from New York. He returns for a few weeks' visit to his ancestral halls in Kent and Warwickshire. He is enthusiastic in his praises of Texas, which he says is the 'greatest country in the world for the pursuit of health, wealth and happiness.' He will return to the United States early in the Autumn, and will be accompanied by a number of his aristocratic friends, who propose to pass a few weeks roughing it on the Earl's Texas ranch, and whom he hopes to persuade to purchase land and settle as his neighbors."

During the existence of the National banking system, covering more than twenty years, the number of banks organized under it has reached a total never contemplated by the framers of the law, yet out of the whole there have been only ninety failures, with a loss to their creditors of only about $9,000,000, while every dollar of circulation issued has been redeemed. The average annual loss to depositors in banks of this class has been less than one per cent. The aggregate of deposits in banks of all classes in the United States will fall little, if any, short of $3,000,000,000, or about double the sum total of the public debt, and the percentage of loss to depositors in National banks is less than in any other class.

It is evident that many people believe in so-called faith cures. In Boston, there is a regular "faith cure" establishment where patients are taken as in a hospital; and there is another at Corning, New York, of the same sort and also a similar house in St. Paul, where the sick and well meet and pray. The "mountain evangelist," Mr. Barnes, has made extensive use of faith cures in his ministry, and his followers believe devoutly in his power, by the laying on of hands and anointing, to heal diseases of persons who have implicit faith. A rector of the Episcopal church at Stamford, Conn., has recently excited much comment by performing, or pretending to perform, the same sort of cures.

The business of the country cannot be depressed when forty-seven railroads report for April an increase of nine per cent. upon their gross earnings of April 1883, and an increase of ten per cent. in their mileage. But it does not follow that because these earnings are substantially what they were a year ago, prices in general should be the same, the reason being that many of our railroads suffer the natural effects of over-capitalization. Boston for instance, holds $750,000,000 railroad securities, but one of the most conservative papers in that city says that nobody, however slightly familiar with the origin of the securities, has any reason to believe that their original cost was one-half the sum named, of course, this being true, they could stand great depreciations, and at the same time be sources of great profit so long as fair dividends were made.

A few days ago a Philadelphia paper in discoursing on the weather said: It is the tremendous drain thus made upon the human system by the violent changes of our climate which renders our men unfit to bear study or long continued work. Call it od, or electricity, or simple heat, as you please, there is a subtle influence in the air at certain seasons which is the very elixir of life. It is conspicuously absent in such weather as that of last week, and its absence produces the decay of vital force, disease for the middle-aged, and death for the old. The only remedies suggested, other than flight to more genial regions is to keep up our vital force so thoroughly that we may be able to stand these murderous assaults of our invisible foe. This is to be done by our readers by wholesome, nutritious food and by rest. This is all very good, but many will be surprised to know of a necessity is for such precautions in Philadelphia, which is generally supposed to possess a mild climate.

News has just been received from Elizabethtown, Ky., that the Harden county court house, with all the records, was consumed by an incendiary fire Monday morning. There has been a vendette in progress in that county several years, and numerous killings resulted. Finally lawabiding people took hold of the matter and caused indictments to be found against a large number of these turbulent characters. It is the general belief that the court house was fired for the purpose of destroying the records of these indictments in order to embarrass proceedings against them.

The storm around Pomeroy, Ohio, Thursday, was terrific. The wind blew sixty miles an hour, and rain fell in torrents, accompanied by heavy hail, and a few moments the the mountain streams overflowed their banks, submerging the rich farms along the bottoms, and soon extended in a level sheet from hill to hill, bearing along fences, shattered buildings, uprooted trees, and debris of all descriptions. The damage to the section of country covered by the storm is very large, many farmers being almost entirely ruined.

What Made Old Eno Mad.

New York Special: It has become known that John S. Eno, after he had confessed to his father that he had lost in speculation $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 of the funds of the Second National bank, coolly drew a check on that bank for $95,000 and had it cashed down town. It is said that the venerable Amos R. Eno was so indignant that he at first refused to honor the check. After a while, however, the old gentleman was persuaded to pay half. Anson Phelps Stokes said that a check for $95,000 did come in the day after the bank was declared solvent, and Mr. Amos Eno paid half of it. A gentleman quite familiar with the facts said: "When John S. Eno drew that check for $95,000 and got it cashed down town he knew very well that either his father or the directors of the bank would pay it."

An Enormous Haul.

Charles A. Hinckley, paying teller of the West Side Bank, Eighth avenue and Thirty-fourth street New York, embezzled $96,000 of the bank's funds and decamped. The embezzlement was discovered on Wednesday the 21st. Hinckley did not appear at the bank on that morning, and not answering to a summons sent to his house, it was suspected that something was wrong. His books were overhauled and the large deficit detected. The bank officers certify that he capital stock ($200,000) is intact, and there is a surplus of $100,182. There is to be added to the surplus the bonds ($10,000) of the paying teller given by the Fidelity and Indemnity company. The matter was kept a secret until an investigation by officers was finished. Hinckley had been connected with the bank as its paying teller ever since its organization fifteen years ago. He was regarded as a man of the most rigid integrity.

Ben Butler's Bad Nephew.

Washington Special: George H. Butler, who is one of the most brilliant men in the country, but who is unfortunately cursed with dypsomania, has been a voluntary inmate of an insane asylum for the last eight months endeavoring to cure himself of the appetite. His uncle, Gen. Butler, offered him $10,000 if he would keep sober a year, and he has tried his best to earn the money but the other day he came out to see the bicycle parade and could not control himself. In the morning when he came over from the asylum he looked as fresh as a schoolboy, but before midnight he was in the station house, drunk and dirty. Being arraigned in the police court next day for drunkenness, he made a touching appeal to the court saying:

This is the first time for eight months, judge; I've tried, God knows how hard to keep from drinking, and I went eight months without a drop. I claim your mercy and consideration. Send me over to the asylum in charge of an officer, and I'll try again.

CONGRESSIONAL MATTERS.

A resolution was introduced in the senate asking the president by what authority commissioners had been appointed to examine sections of the Northern Pacific railway after the time when the terms of the land grant required the road to be completed had expired.

In the house Mr. Hewitt of New York, in a long speech, disclaimed the authorship of the letter sent out from Pittsburg in his name, answering Mr. Olivers's criticisms upon his (Hewitt's) tariff bill. The senate amendments to the shipping bill were non-concurred in.

Mr. Ingall's bill regarding the judicial districts of the United States, as amended and reported by the senate judiciary committee, changes the Eighth circuit so that it will comprise the districts of Nebraska, Kansas, Arkansas and Colorado, and the Ninth circuit so that it will contain the districts of Minnesota, Iowa and Missouri. The Tenth circuit is made the same as the present Ninth, and the judge of the Ninth is made the judge of the Tenth circuit. It further provides that there shall be appointed a circuit judge for the Ninth judicial circuit (new). If the bill becomes a law the Ninth circuit, in which Minnesota is situated, would be without a judge, and a new judge is thus provided for.

Mr. Raymond's bill providing for two additional associate justices of the supreme court of Dakota has reached the senate, and has beed referred to the committee on judiciary.

The house committee on military affairs instructed Representative Slocum to report favorably his bill providing that honorably discharged soldiers or sailors be preferred for appointment to civil offices when found to possess the capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices.

In the senate, the chair appointed Messrs. Sherman, Allison, Bayard and Lamar members, on the part of the senate, of the committee to supervise the dedication ceremonies in connection with the Washington monument. A number of petitions were presented and referred, protesting against any government assumption of telegraph service.

A bill passed the house to authorize the issue of the congressional record and statutes at large to public libraries. A bill passed authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi at Sibley, Mo. The Utah bill was laid aside, and the bill establishing a bureau of state statistics was taken up. Pending action unanimous consent was obtained to put the following bills upon their passage, and they passed: Bills permitting the erection of the bridge across the Missouri at White Cloud, Kans.; another across the same river at Rulo, Kans; another across the same river between its mouth and the mouth of the Dakota on same river; another across the Mississippi between St. Paul and Natchez, and another across the Illinois river between its mouth and Peoria; also a bill authorizing the Bellingham Bay railroad and Navigation company to build bridges in the Territory of Washington.

The commissioner of pensions sent to the senate a list of the widows of army and navy officers who are drawing pensions of more than $50 a month. Mrs. Garfield receives $4,000 a year, the same that was given to Mrs. Lincoln, and the widow of Admiral Farragut receives $2,000. In the army list the widows or sisters of the following generals receive $50 per month:

Hackleman, Richardson, Wallace, Plummer, Stevens, Baker, Whipple, Sumner, Bidwell, Morris, Berry, Lovell, Shields, Heintzleman, Farley, Mitchell, Carey, Rosseau, Custer, French, Ramsey, Warren and Mecham.

The daughter of President Zachary Taylor also receives $50 per month. The house committee on pensions has agreed to report a bill to give Mrs. De Long, the Widow of the Arctic explorer, a pension of $50 a month. The bill granting a pension to Almira Kaler of Meeker county, Minn., was favorably reported to the house.

After nearly three days of wrangling, the house decided the English-Peelle contest by unseating Peelle, Republican, and seating English, Democrat, by a majority of three; more than thirty Democrats voted against English. The sensation of the day was the charge, made in a very caustic speech by Horr of Michigan, that English, senior, father of the contestant, has grossly abused the privilege of the floor, as a former M. C. by resorting to obnoxious and even objectionable methods to secure votes for his son.

A dozen democrats sprang to their feet to defend Mr. English, and vehement speeches were made by Randall, Cox and others. A resolution was offered by Bayne of Pennsylvania to appoint a committee of seven to investigate the charges in this connection against William H. English. The resolution was adopted.

The report of the senate committee on post-offices and post roads on the subject of postal telegraph has been completed by Senator Hill. It gives a summary of the history, increase, debts, rental and capital stock of the Western Union telegraph company and value of its property, leased and otherwise, and says: The passage of the postal telegraph bill will reduce the average charge per telegram from thirty-nine to twenty-five cents immediately, and to twenty cents in five years, and secure uniformity of charges, irrespective of amount of business in different places, for telegrams to newspapers and to commercial news associations. Under the present telegraphic system, the possibility of a species of censorship, which is one of the most alarming dangers which menace the country, arises in two distinct ways. first is the power which telegraph companies themselves have for manipulating news for sinister purposes, and the second is the same association press and other similar associations not themselves owning telegraph lines, but making special contracts for the transmission of telegrams over lines owned and managed by others. It will appear that the power of the telegraph company in this respect will be entirely taken away by the pending bill, and that the power of the associated press and similar associations will be greatly reduced. The bill will effectually take power away from the Western Union or any other private telegraph company by low rates which it secures to everybody, and by the still lower rates which it secures commercial news associations.

On Friday, in the senate Mr. Harrison reported favorably, from the committee on territories, the house bill in relation to the legislature of Dakota, which provides that that body shall consist of twenty-four members of the council and forty-eight members of the house, and that they shall be elected at the next general election in the territory; two members of the council and four members of the senate. The pension appropriation and labor bureau bills passed, the vote on the latter measure being 53 to 2. The house bill providing for the muster and pay of certain officers and men of the volunteer forces also passed. Adjourned till Monday.

On Friday, in the House, Mr. Kellogg offered a resolution instructing the committee on expenditures of the department of justice to inquire into his (Kellogg's) alleged connection with star route frauds. After a speech by Kellogg and a long discussion, the resolution was referred to the committee on judiciary, to report whether the house has a legal right thus to order an investigation of the acts of a member before his term of service began. The bill for the payment of quartermaster claims, known as Fourth of July claims, and appropriately $300,000, passed. The house at the evening session passed forty six pension bills, including one giving $50 per month to the wife of Gen. Ord.

Mr. Springer took occasion to speak in strong condemnation of the bill to retire Gen. Grant and to give him a pension of $10,125 a year, simply because he had been unfortunate in Wall street. It was said that Gen. Grant had not been aware of the dealings of his partners but the fact remained that he had associated himself with speculators who were involved in the most disreputable practices which had ever been heard of in this country, and were only paralleled in other countries by the South Sea bubble and John Law's Mississippi scheme. This was not the time nor were the circumstances such as called upon congress to go to Grant's relief.

The senate has passed a substitute for the house bill establishing a labor bureau. It provides for a commissioner of labor to be appointed by the president and confirmed by the senate, and who shall hold office for four years at an annual salary of $3,000. A chief clerk at $2,000 a year, is to be appointed by the secretary of the interior. The business of the bureau shall be to collect information upon the subject of labor, its relations to capital, hours of labor and earnings of laboring men and women and means of promoting their material, social, intellectual and moral prosperity, at an annual expense of not more than $25,000 a year.

Moody and Sankey Invited to St. Paul.

At a large meeting of the ministers of St. Paul, the matter of renewing the invitation to the Messrs. Moody and Sankey to hold a series of meetings in that city was considered. Dr. Riddell was chosen chairman, in the absence of Dr. Miller, the regular chairman. After a full discussion and consideration of the question by all present, and the testimony of ministers who had worked with Mr. Moody in other places, it was voted unanimously and cordially to present the invitation and urge the visit at as early a date as possible. Earnest views of the necessity of this effort were presented, and the wide scope it would have, and the influence on all the churches of the Northwest presented.

MINNESOTA NEWS NOTES.

Minnesota Homeopathic Association Meeting.

The Minnesota Homeopathic Institute commenced its eighteenth annual session at Minneapolis on Tuesday the 20th, Dr. Henry Hutchinson of St. Paul, the president, in the chair. Some fifty members were present. The session opened with prayer by Dr. W. H. Leonard, after which Dr. W. H. Leonard, the treasurer, reported that the receipts for the year were $105.25, all of which had been expended, with the treasury $28 in debt. About a dozen applicants were reported favorably for membership, and they were elected. A large number of papers were read.

Dr. H. C. Leonard, read a paper on "Rupture of the Bladder," which he said was a fatal but, happily, rare accident.

Dr. O. M. Humphrey of Minneapolis read a paper on "Inguinal Hernia," which is the protrusion of some portion of the intestine or other organ from the abdominal cavity.

Dr. D. Silliman of Hudson, Wis., read a paper on "Amenorrhœa," treatment of a case of which by electricity he described:

Dr. Tucker of Northfield reported on the "Ill Effects of Lactic Acic in Children."

Dr. O. H. Hall of Zumbrota read a paper on the "Verification of Remedies." He gave a list of a number of symptoms which usually precede fever, and which seemed to indicate pitric acid as a remedy.

For obstetrics—Dr. Walthers of St. Paul and Dr. Leonard reported technical papers on eclampsia.

Dr. W. E. Leonard read a paper on "Verification of Symptoms."

In the bureau of Opthalmology and Otology Dr. F. A. Stevens, of St. Paul, read a paper on "Otitis Media Acuta and Meningitis in Infants and Children." This disease, which is the ordinary earache of childhood, he said, was commonly neglected by physicians, although affecting one of the most delicate and important organs in the body. To this neglect might be ascribed a great number of the cases of incurable deafness in later life. From the intimate connection of the middle ear with the brain in the very young severe cases often cause cerebral symptoms. In children too young to express themselves it is often treated as brain disease, and the ear allowed to become impaired. This disease is extremely liable to accompany all of the diseases common to childhood. The doctor gave some practical suggestions, as to its diagnosis and treatment in its various phases.

Dr. Beaumont gave a technical account of two cases of ear disease.

At the opening on Wednesday, Dr R. D. Matchan of River Falls, Wis., reported an interesting case of partial insanity which he had treated.

In the bureau of physiology and pathology, Dr. F. A. Stevens of St. Paul read a paper on the "Histological Pathology of Inflammation, Demonstrated by the Microscope." Inflammation he divided into five varieties, characterized by different changes among the cells of the tissues of the parts affected. These changes he described at length, illustrating by drawings and also by the microscope. The paper was regarded one of the most valuable of the session, and the institute gave a vote of thanks to its author.

Dr. George A. Hawes of Hastings read the next paper, on "Diphtheria Considered from a Germ Theory Standpoint," which he stated was the view held in a recent work of Dr. T. MacLagan of London. Dr. Roberts of Owatonna read a paper on "Curative Influences, Psychological and Material." Dr. W. H. Caine of Stillwater reported a case of ovariotomy, made by Dr. G. F. Roberts of Minneapolis, where the tumor weighed forty-five pounds.

In the afternoon the nominating committee reported and the report was adopted, selecting the following officers:

President—Dr. O. H. Hall of Zumbrota.

Vice Presidents—Dr. A. M. Eastman, St. Paul, and Dr. C. H. Glidden, of Pine Island.

Secretary—Dr. A. A. Camp, of Minneapolis.

Treasurer—W. E. Leonard, of Minneapolis.

Censors—Drs. H. Hutchinson of St. Paul, W. H. Leonard of Minneapolis, and D. H. Roberts of Owatonna.

Executive Committee—Drs. C. G. Higbee of St. Paul, A. A. Camp of Minneapolis, and H. T. Leonard of Fergus Falls.

Publishing Committee—Drs. W. E. Leonard of Minneapolis, W. A. Craddock of St. Paul, and A. A. Camp of Minneapolis.

The president, Dr. Henry Hutchinson of St. Paul, then read his annual address, his topic being "The Healing Art." Dr. Higbee, chairman of the committee to present the claims of the homeopaths to the regents of the university reported that the only method which could be made to win would be to have legislature pass a law requiring a homeopathic representation on the medical faculty. To this end, the taxpayers should be appealed to by petition to make this one of the issues in the next canvass for the members of the legislature. The executive committee was instructed to provide for a semi-annual meeting of the institute, with a banquet, to be held in St. Paul next fall.

Minnesota News.

Southern Minnesota druggists met at Rochester, recently, and organized a protective association. F. A. Poole, Rochester, was elected president, and G. Hargesheimer, same place secretary. The next meeting is at Kasson, May 2, 1885.

Col. Bend at St. Paul has approved the finding of the court martial by which Private C. S. Leeds, of Company I, First regiment, is found guilty of making a false statement to Maj. Naylor, at Stillwater, on Feb. 1. Leeds applied for a pass, and stated that Capt. Reeve was asleep, which is proven to have been contrary to the truth. The court martial sentenced Leeds to be reprimanded in general orders, a copy of which reprimand will be posted in Company I's room at the Minneapolis armory for thirty days.

Anthony Ford of Carimona, Fillmore county, has been adjudged insane and taken to the Rochester asylum for the second time. On the way there, in charge of Sheriff Langum, he seized the reins, made the horses run away and jumped out. While the sheriff was looking for assistance, the lunatic tore off all his clothing but his boots, filled his mouth with dust and covered himself from head to foot with it, and laid down in the road. He was dressed again, and finally landed in Rochester, He is forty years old and of intemperate habits.

A young couple are going down the Minnesota river in a canoe on their wedding journey. They are bound for Dubuque.

The mails bring additional reports of damage by last Sunday's storm. A letter from Utica, in the western part of Winona county says: The storm came up from the west divided west of here, one section going down Pine creek, taking out two sections of the milldam at Troy, and the dam at the mill below. Two men were caught on the dam at Troy trying to hoist the flood gate, and remained there in peril of their lives until late into the night, when they were rescued. The storm was accompanied by hail that covered the ground two inches deep, and was washed into drifts by the water, where it remained all next day. The roads are washed out, bridges gone, and travel suspended. No lives lost so far as heard from here, but the damage to stock, fences and buildings is great. The other section of the storm took nearly the same track of last year's cyclone, going down the south branch of the Whitewater. The rain fell in perfect torrents flooding the valleys, drowning stock and badly scaring the inhabitants.

Deer Creek, Otter Tail county farmers, had a grand gopher hunt Monday, bagging 852.

H. H. Wilson, assistant foreman and timekeeper in the round house at Austin has skipped to parts unknown, to the sorrow of a large number of creditors, who are left without resort. It is understood upon the street that he has got into his friends here to the amount of about $4,000, in amounts ranging from $400 to 1,400. Among those victimized are J. H. Patterson, B. Fredrickse, First National bank, C. H. Coats and James Hay. The money was in some cases advanced on Wilson's personal paper. Fredericks and others are caught as signers. In some cases forged collaterals are used. It is also stated that in his railroad accounts as timekeeper a good deal of time was charged up to the company that was not actually earned. Wilson's creditors here express a desire to see him.

The depot at Elgin was entered by burglars, but nothing was removed; and the store of Mr. Burbank was visited, where a quantity of goods were removed.

T. T. Jenks of Lake City, a pioneer settler, went from there some days ago to a tree claim of his near Appleton Lac Qui Parle county, and there he he suddenly died last Monday night of heart disease, having been active during the day and retiring to bed without complaint of being ill.

Individualities.

Frank Hurd, the Ohio free-trade congressman, is only 42 years of age. He is the son of an old hotel-keeper of German descent, who kept a tavern at a little town near Mount Vernon, Ohio. His father made some money and Frank was given a good education.

Fashionable society in Washington seems difficult to suit. The white leaders refuse to receive Mrs. Douglass since her marriage to Fred Douglass, and colored ladies resolutely close their doors against Mr. Douglass because he married a white woman.

Miss Ella Wheeler in her maiden days having naively sung:

> "I will love the man whom my soul reveres,
> And kiss him blue with a fiery yearn—"

the Albany Times somewhat pertinently observes that by this time the happy Mr. Wilcox is no doubt yelling for help.

The English people are smiling at the news from Australia that Lord Chief Justice Williams, of that colony rides into the assize towns upon a bicycle. "Imagine," says one of the papers, "our Lord Chief Justice or the great and majestic Sir Henry Hawkins entering Bristol, Gloucester, or Chester, or, indeed, any of the towns of our assize, in this manner and going to their lodgings incog. instead of, as now, being met at the railway station by the high sheriff of the county, the local mayor and dignitaries of the place, as well as a number of the country gentry and nobility and escorted to the cathedral."

A Washington correspondent relates that he was standing beside Pension Commissioner Dudley at the Ohio reception last week, when a lady noting the wistful gaze of the colonel as hundreds of couples whirled by in the mazes of a Strauss waltz, asked: "Do you not dance, Colonel Dudley?" With a smile, he replied, "No, I danced my last just before the battle of Gettysburg. A lot of us were out on picket duty, and, skirmishing about came to an old Dutch oven, beside which we found three buxom German girls baking bread. We stopped to chat with them, and, an old man appearing with a fiddle, we improvised a dance then and there. It was great fun, and we went into battle the next day all the better for it. Before the fight was finished, however, a shot carried off my leg and stopped my dancing forever."

Reunited by the Baby.

From the Philadelphia Times.

Katie Andress, a sixteen year old wife, with a six months old baby in her arms, charged Spencer C. Andress, her twenty year old husband, in the desertion court yesterday, with failing to support her and her baby.

"What is the cause of this trouble?" asked Judge Allison.

"It is this, sir," answered the little wife, tearfully. "He—he wanted me to live with his parents, and I—I wouldn't do it."

"And she wanted me to go and live with her parents," interposed the boy husband, "and I wouldn't do it."

"My dear children," said the good Judge, "go settle this little difference between you and wherever you live, live together. You love each other too much, I am sure, to care to separate. Be mutually forbearing and I am sure you will be happy.'

Katie looked at Spencer and Spencer looked at Katie, then both looked at the baby lying smiling in Katie's arms.

"Katie" said Spencer, as he took the baby up and kissed it, "the Judge has a level head. Let us go."

He gave the baby back into her care, but as they were going out the baby turned round and laughed a merry little laugh right in its papa's face. Papa thought that was so funny that he took hold of the baby's fat and dimpled hands and held them while he tickled the baby's nose with the nice, soft down on his upper lip. The baby's laugh grew louder and merrier and the half-score of elder wives and elder mothers waiting in the court room to tell their dismal stories forgot their woes long enough to smile on the refreshing spectacle and to dream again the dreams of the bygone years, when faith and hope in them were more powerful than the sting of new wounds. "See how the bady links them together," said apparently the eldest and saddest looking of these. "Oh, my! oh, my! the dear little baby! May the bond never be broken."

Chicago Society Item.

A Chicago paper tells the following at the expense of the ladies of that city: "When the opera came to Chicago," said the head of "the retail" in a large dry good house, "I noticed there were two or three expensive lace shawls sent home on approbation and returned the morning after the preformance. This set me thinking, and when Mrs. B. came in the day of an opera night and asked to have one of the most expensive wraps sent home to look at, I just stepped out to old Swag's the ticket speculator, and bought seats immediatly behind those of Mr. and Mrs. B. When I came in, a little late, there was Mrs. B seated in front of me with the elegant lace wrap sent home in the morning over her shoulders. When she turned I greeted her politely, and said I was delighted the wrap had suited her. She looked rather unhappy during the preformance, but the shawl was not returned to the store, and I charged my opera ticket to expense account."

Conkling's Income from Law.

Perhaps Mr. Roscoe Conkling did well to go out of politics. It is no exaggeration to estimate his income from the law at $100,000 a year, and rather apt to be more than less. The Hoyt will contest, in which he is now engaged, will reward him very handsomely for even the greatest effort of his life. The late Jesse Hoyt left an estate valued at about $8,000,000 or $10,000,000. The proceedings are brought on the behalf of Mary Irene Hoyt, his daughter, who received under the will the income of $1,250,000; Mrs. Helen Maria Hoyt, the widow, received a like sum, with power to dispose of $750,000 at her death. Several allowances have already been granted to the mother and daughter pending the decision, the last being an allowance of $50,000 each. Mr. William M. Evarts is opposed to Mr. Conkling, and both are assisted by the usual legal drudges provided in great cases.

THE BACK-YARD.

Many back-yards are abominations to the eye and nose. One finds in them all sorts of litter and refuse from oyster cans to old boots. Here the slops of the kitchen are poured to increase the odors which ought to warn ever thoughtful person of the malarial influence breeding there, to break out eventually in fevers, or diphtheria. If any member of the family dies from one of these diseases, his death is probably lamented as a "mysterious dispensation of providence," but the minister would say if he were to visit the back-yard, that death was caused solely by a violation of hygienic laws. A very strong argument against a dirty back-yard, is the spirit of deception which it is apt to foster in the young members of the family, for it is a constant deceit to present a clean and attractive front-yard to the gaze of the passers, while the back-yard is not fit to be seen. Children should be taught to be clean for the sake of cleanliness, and not becaus outsiders are likely to criticise them. The best plan is to have a hogshead or large box fitted up in one corner of the yard, and make it a rule to throw into this old cans, boots, dishes, and all such rubbish, and when there is a great accumulation, to bury or burn it. Do not allow anything to be thrown about. Have drains made to convey all slops entirely away from the house. Make good walks, and let the ground have a fine covering of grass, not weeds. Put up strong supports for the clothes line. Keep the fence in repair, and plant currant bushes near it. Set vines about the refuse barrel, and train them over it until it is hidden. If you have a receptacle for ashes, let it be something which can be shut up, not a row of old barrels to offend the eye, and give out a cloud of ashes every time the wind blows. Make it a rule to have the back-yard at all times as the front one.—E. E. Rexford, in American Agriculturist for June.

THE VALUE OF GOOD STOCK.

Correspondent Grand Forks Plaindealer.

Why is it that fine stock still commands such high prices? Note the offer and refusal recently of $15,000 for a cow on a farm near Newburg, N. Y., and the sale of a little Jersey cow about two years since for $4,800, mentioned in late exchanges. These are certainly most extravagant prices, and far beyond any real or actual practical value of such stock, but not comparatively beyond the gambling value put on fast horses by gamblers and the senseless extravagance of men who have amassed wealth by shrewd management of other men's labor, or by speculation and facilities afforded by class legislation and the inattention of the working classes. These exceptionally fast horses may be appropriately classed as fancy stock, for they are in their great speed, of no general practical utility; but it is otherwise with the cows referred to, one, the Holstein, producing over fifty-one quarts of milk in one day, and twenty-six pounds of butter in one week, and the other, the Jersey, about twenty-three quarts of milk in one day, and over twenty-seven pounds of butter in one week. These are the largest products known, and of course will very nearly be equaled, but by careful selection and keeping, ought to be quite often approximated, and the common or average yield ought to be generally trebled. This could be accomplished with little more attention and care of this invaluable branch of farm stock which should be extended to ample food-supplies, including roots, and to spacious warm quarters during severe or inclement weather. For general stock feeding the carrot is thought to be the best and may be fed to the cow in milk quite liberally without injuring the quality of the butter as turnips will when liberally fed. It were well and would be found profitable were every farmer to plant one-fourth of an acre in root crops for each cow he expects to keep next winter, principally the carrot which is hardy and easily grown, and may be planted any time this month yet for a good crop. Should there be any to spare beyond the cow's use horses would soon learn to eat them and become fond of them too. I suggest this "whereof I know" by years of my own experience.—Minnesota Farmer.

SELLS BROTHERS' GREAT SHOW.

Crawfordsville Argus, May 1st.

No amusement organization on the continent enjoys a better reputation than this institution. They come on their own special trains and every appointment from beginning to end is complete in every detail. In their splendid street parade there are to be seen fifty cages of animals besides their golden chariots, elephants, camels, ponies and in fact all and more than was announced which was positive proof that the Sells Brothers came with the intention of keeping faith with the public. MORTGAGE SALE.

[First Publication May 29th, 1884.]

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Thomas R. Dennison, mortgagor, to Paul C. Sletten and John Cromb, mortgagees, dated the third day of May, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the seventeenth day of May A. D. 1882, at 4 o'clock p. m., in book "H" of mortgages, on page 24, on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the amount of ninety-six and 25-100 dollars, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, at public auction, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on Friday the eleventh day of July A. THE BACK-YARD.

Many back-yards are abominations to the eye and nose. One finds in them all sorts of litter and refuse from oyster cans to old boots. Here the slops of the kitchen are poured to increase the odors which ought to warn ever thoughtful person of the malarial influence breeding there, to break out eventually in fevers, or diphtheria. If any member of the family dies from one of these diseases, his death is probably lamented as a "mysterious dispensation of providence," but the minister would say if he were to visit the back-yard, that death was caused solely by a violation of hygienic laws. A very strong argument against a dirty back-yard, is the spirit of deception which it is apt to foster in the young members of the family, for it is a constant deceit to present a clean and attractive front-yard to the gaze of the passers, while the back-yard is not fit to be seen. Children should be taught to be clean for the sake of cleanliness, and not becaus outsiders are likely to criticise them. The best plan is to have a hogshead or large box fitted up in one corner of the yard, and make it a rule to throw into this old cans, boots, dishes, and all such rubbish, and when there is a great accumulation, to bury or burn it. Do not allow anything to be thrown about. Have drains made to convey all slops entirely away from the house. Make good walks, and let the ground have a fine covering of grass, not weeds. Put up strong supports for the clothes line. Keep the fence in repair, and plant currant bushes near it. Set vines about the refuse barrel, and train them over it until it is hidden. If you have a receptacle for ashes, let it be something which can be shut up, not a row of old barrels to offend the eye, and give out a cloud of ashes every time the wind blows. Make it a rule to have the back-yard at all times as the front one.—E. E. Rexford, in American Agriculturist for June.

THE VALUE OF GOOD STOCK.

Correspondent Grand Forks Plaindealer.

Why is it that fine stock still commands such high prices? Note the offer and refusal recently of $15,000 for a cow on a farm near Newburg, N. Y., and the sale of a little Jersey cow about two years since for $4,800, mentioned in late exchanges. These are certainly most extravagant prices, and far beyond any real or actual practical value of such stock, but not comparatively beyond the gambling value put on fast horses by gamblers and the senseless extravagance of men who have amassed wealth by shrewd management of other men's labor, or by speculation and facilities afforded by class legislation and the inattention of the working classes. These exceptionally fast horses may be appropriately classed as fancy stock, for they are in their great speed, of no general practical utility; but it is otherwise with the cows referred to, one, the Holstein, producing over fifty-one quarts of milk in one day, and twenty-six pounds of butter in one week, and the other, the Jersey, about twenty-three quarts of milk in one day, and over twenty-seven pounds of butter in one week. These are the largest products known, and of course will very nearly be equaled, but by careful selection and keeping, ought to be quite often approximated, and the common or average yield ought to be generally trebled. This could be accomplished with little more attention and care of this invaluable branch of farm stock which should be extended to ample food-supplies, including roots, and to spacious warm quarters during severe or inclement weather. For general stock feeding the carrot is thought to be the best and may be fed to the cow in milk quite liberally without injuring the quality of the butter as turnips will when liberally fed. It were well and would be found profitable were every farmer to plant one-fourth of an acre in root crops for each cow he expects to keep next winter, principally the carrot which is hardy and easily grown, and may be planted any time this month yet for a good crop. Should there be any to spare beyond the cow's use horses would soon learn to eat them and become fond of them too. I suggest this "whereof I know" by years of my own experience.—Minnesota Farmer.

SELLS BROTHERS' GREAT SHOW.

Crawfordsville Argus, May 1st.

No amusement organization on the continent enjoys a better reputation than this institution. They come on their own special trains, and every appointment from beginning to end is complete in every detail. In their splendid street parade there are to be seen fifty cages of animals besides their golden chariots, elephants, camels, ponies and in fact all and more than was announced which was positive proof that the Sells Brothers came with the intention of keeping faith with the public. Without exception the street parade was the finest we have ever had. In justice to this great show we will quote from a few of the leading journals where they have exhibited. The Cincinnati Enquirer says: "The best show ever in Cincinnati." The Covington Commonwealth says: "The most complete exhibition we have ever witnessed." The Louisville Courier-Journal says: "Every promise faithfully fulfilled." [illegible] Purvis, Ed Neary, Charley Seeley and a host of other artists equally as worthy of mention are with the company, and the arenic attractions are beyond comprehension. Always the best. This season better than ever. This is the universal verdict, everybody and their friends are there this afternoon. Go early to-night and witness the "best show on the road."

DECORATION DAY.

A Big Day in Crookston.

The first decoration services ever held in Crookston proved an immense success in point of attendance and interest.

The following is the ORDER OF EXERCISES.

Marshal and Policemen.
Crookston Cornet Band.
Col. Cobham Post No. 90, G. A. R.
Mayor and City Council.
Crookston Fire Department.
St. John Baptiste Cornet Band.
School Children.
Citizens in Carriages.

The procession formed in front of the G. A. R. hall on Main Street, marched up Main to Fletcher, down Fletcher to Ash, thence to Houston Ave., thence around to Broadway, up Broadway to Robert Street and thence to the grove, where, after the bands discoursed some fine music, a male choir, consisting of Messrs. Cromb, Buchanan, Van Norman, Herrick, Mix, Lilly, Will, Gaboury and Durand sang appropriate pieces, which was followed by a fine oration, delivered by F. F. Coffin, Esq., of Red Lake Falls. After more singing and music by the band the solemn and impressive decoration services were held. This service over, the line of march was resumed up Robert Street to Broadway, up Broadway to Seventh, thence along Seventh to Main Street, down Main to the hall where three cheers for the old flag were given and three cheers for Col. Cobham Post, No. 90, G. A. R. Thus ended the first decoration services ever held in this city and it was a grand success in every particular. Good judges estimate over 2000 people and 600 children participating, which shows that Crookston has as much patriotism to the square inch as any city in existence.

CROOKSTON, May 31st, 1884.

In behalf of Col. Cobham Post 90 G. A. R. I do hereby extend my hearty and sincere thanks to the Fire company, the Brass bands, Mayor and City Council and Public schools and the people generally, for their kind and earnest co-operation in observing memorial day and aiding us in properly remembering our former comrades in arms and paying worthy tribute to their memories.

Crookston, Thursday, June 5.

'ROUND HOME.

South Crookston is the place to build your cottage this summer.

M. Norton put up a telephone at the Central house last Wednesday.

Herb Mason is going to run the confectionery department at the new Opera house.

It is said that Capt. B. F. Zrrracher sets an excellent table and keeps a good house.

A. McKinnon has gone to St. Paul on a short trip, combining business with pleasure.

Hon. H. Steenerson left for Chicago on Saturday evening to be in at the great convention.

The first boot-heels, denoting the presence of the festive riverman, appeared upon the floors on Monday, June 2d.

Eiken Bros. have the sole agency for the celebrated White Sewing machine. They will carry a full line of extras.

Messrs. Sletten & Cromb have purchased the quarter block on the corner of Broadway and Third Street of Davis Brower, for $7,000.

Why go half a mile out of town to buy your lots, when you can have them just as cheap close to the centre of it from the Crookston Improvement Company?

There will be a large stock of furniture in one of Dobson's store rooms on Broadway soon. The party has rented the building and has gone to Grand Rapids for his stock.

Sandy McDonald was up from Ada on Wednesday to see our flourishing city and visit his brother Dan. He reports crops in Norman County flourishing but needing rain.

The Crookston Improvement Company has got an attractive sign on their office, painted by McCarthy & Smith. Don't forget to look over their still more attractive property in South Crookston.

Crookston is proud of her fire department and surely she ought to be for never was there a finer appearing body of men than there is in our fire department. They came out in uniform on May 30th for the first time and went through with their drill as if they had been drilled for twenty years. THE JOURNAL congratulates them on their appearance and exactness in drill.

GOOD LUCK!

Were you ever aware of the fact that South Crookston is surrounded by Red Lake River and Crookston, like a horse shoe, with the water power at one end and the big saw mill at the other? That means good luck to South Crookston, and everybody investing there.

Col. Colham post No. 90 G. A. R., made a very fine appearance under the command of the Senior Commander W. F. Zwickey, assisted by Capt. McCarty, of Red Lake Falls, acting Sergeant Major. When it is known that our post is yet in its infancy having had little or no drill the display they made is truly creditable alike to officers and men.

The opening of the Grand Opera house on Wednesday evening was a grand success. The home troupe did well, the fire scene being one of the finest displays ever witnessed in our city. Time forbids such a full mention as the troupe deserves, but the 500 people in attendance seemed well pleased. Ground was broken for the opera house on April 9th. The plans were furnished by Jos. Netzer and the work has been pushed as fast as men and money could do it under the supervision of Mr. M. Filiatrault the proprietor. The stage builder, Mr. W. K. Brown did a fine piece of work and Mr. Hurtt, the scenic artist has left nothing to be desired in the way of scenery. Although it is not as large as the St. Paul Grand, the citizens of Crookston may congratulate themselves on having as fine an opera house as any city in the Northwest.

FISHING!

Is going on at a tremendous rate in the river. The Crookston Improvement Company, it is said, is going to put in a live fish trap with an elevator to take it off whenever wanted. Everybody on the south bank of the river is at liberty to fish. The best fish that can be caught, is to catch one of those beautifully located lots in South Crookston.

At high noon Tuesday, a very impressive ceremony took place on Houston Ave, at the residence of Mr. Charles Chiniquy, the well known dry goods merchant of our city. The contracting parties were Mr. B. F. Welly, manager of the dining station on the Manitoba R. R. and Miss Clara Chiniquy, of this city. It has been whispered for some time past that something of that nature would soon take place. [illegible] witnessed the social event of the season. No invitations were issued, [illegible] more than four hundred announcements [illegible]

INDIAN BILLS.

FINAL ACTION ON THE RED LAKE RESERVATION BILL POSTPONED TO THE 10TH INST.

Special Dispatch to the Minneapolis Tribune.

WASHINGTON, May 31st.—The House failed today to reach any of the Indian bills of interest to Minnesota or that section of the country. Two important bills relating to Indian reservations were upon the list which the Indian Affairs Committee had expected to get before the House. One of these was the bill opening the Sioux Reservation in Dakota, which had already passed the Senate. The other was the Nelson bill opening the Red Lake Indian Reservation. There would have been but little delay in getting action on both bills in the House had not "Calamity" Weller, in whose district the Democratic Convention convenes July 10, and who desires to make a record for himself, set to work to oppose bills as they came in from the committee, thus wasting the time of the House and preventing action on important resolutions. The result was that when Nelson's bill was reached it was near time for adjournment and after having [illegible] the House adjourned [illegible] Reservation bill will be taken up the same day. The indications were this afternoon that the Nelson Red Lake Reservation bill will have little opposition on the final vote.

Vocalist and Bell Players.

The Alleghanians announced to appear at the Crookston Opera House June 7th, have recently returned from a very successful tour of eleven years in Europe. The troupe comes to us with the highest praise from the European press, as well as an unequivocal endorsement from the American press, both before they left and since they returned from Europe. As vocalists they delight their audience wherever they appear; and as bell players they have no superiors. Our exchanges speaks of their concerts in a most positive endorsement, as will be seen by the following clipped from the Detroit Free Press of Feb. 22d 1884:

THE ALLEGHANIANS.

"The performance in the Grand Opera House last evening by the troupe of vocalists and bell ringers, known as "The Alleghanians," was witnessed by and audience whose appreciation, if measured by the applause which followed almost every number of the performance, must have been gratifying to their entertainers. The marvelous performance of the troupe upon their magnificent peal of one hundred and twenty Swiss bells, was of course a special feature of the entertainment, whether viewed in the light of its musical excellence, or as an exhibition of deft manipulation. The vocal force of the company includes several voices of unusual excellence, and the duets, songs, and ballads sung last evening were richly deserving of the frequent "encores" the vocalists received. The accompaniments, played with admirable correctness, and the perfect time and accord of the choruses, attained evidently by long years of continuous practice and concert, swaying power to their music, which asserts itself in most all the numbers. This is especially noticeable in their rendition of "The Burning Ship," in which selections the abilities of the performers are brought into play with telling effect, rendering the piece a "morceau," to her which is alone worth the price of admission. The engagement concludes with to-night's performance, and none who can appreciate an evening's genuine enjoyment should fail to attend."

The Alleghanians will favor our lovers of music with but one evening. Plan of hall at the office of the new Opera House where reserved seats can be secured without extra charge.

THE ALLEGHANIANS.

The performance at the Grand Opera House last evening by the troupe of vocalists and bell ringers known as "The Alleghanians" was witnessed by [illegible] audience whose appreciation, if measured by the applause which followed almost every number of the performance, must have been gratifying to the entertainers. The marvelous performance of the troupe upon their magnificent peal of one hundred and twenty Swiss bells was, of course, a special feature of the entertainment, whether viewed in the light of its musical excellence, or as an exhibition of deft manipulation. The vocal force of the company includes several voices of unusual excellence, and the duets, songs, and ballads sung last evening were richly deserving of the frequent encores the vocalists received. The accompaniments, played with admirable correctness, and the perfect time and accord of the choruses, attained evidently by long years of continuous practice and concert, [illegible] power to their music, which asserts itself in most all the numbers. This is especially noticeable in their rendition of "The Burning Ship," in which selections the abilities of the performers are brought into play with telling effect, rendering the piece a morceau, to hear which is alone worth the price of admission. The engagement concludes with to-night's performance, and none who can appreciate an evening's genuine enjoyment should fail to attend.

The Alleghanians will favor our lovers of music with but one evening. Plan of hall at the office of the new Opera House where reserved seats can be secured without extra charge.

Agricultural Notes.

The Stockman truly remarks that no other domestic animal seems to possess so strong an instinct for seeking the shade as does the sheep. Whatever shelter from the sun may be available in the pasture is sure to be sought and occupied by the flock as the day advances and becomes more warm. The instinct should teach the shepherd to provide a shade of some kind which can be easily reached and is always available. The trees are the shade which nature affords, but it is sometimes better to erect sheds. The common sense of the shepherd is the best guide in this matter.

A correspondent of the Rural New Yorker describes the following method by which an extraordinary crop of watermelons was raised: Holes were dug ten feet apart each way, eighteen inches square and fifteen inches deep. These holes were filled with well-rotted manure, which were thoroughly incorporated with the soil. A low, flat hill was then made and seed planted. When the vines were large enough to run the whole surface was covered to the depth of a foot or fifteen inches with wheat straw. The straw was placed close up around the vines. No cultivation whatever was given afterward; no weeds or grass grew. The vines spread over the straw, and the melons matured clean and nice. The yield was abundant and the experiment an entire success. This is surely worth trying.

Diarrhœa or scours in calves is a troublesome disorder chiefly because it is not understood. It is caused by over-feeding which produces indigestion, and then the stomach is entirely unable to preform its functions. Abstinence from food and a rest for twenty-four hours will restore the stomach, but while it is still weak it must be used tenderly. I have found a quart of new milk fresh from the cow, and no more, given twice a day, an invariable cure; but by careful feeding of the calves it is very rarely that there is any trouble in this way. This trouble can be prevented with the greatest certainty if the dairyman will only observe the common rule to "count, measure and weigh" everthing that goes, through his hands, especially the food given to his animals.

Professor C. E. Bessey favors planting evergreens in western ponds, slews, and swamps. These are by far the best and most productive lands in our States. Wheat, corn, oats and rich meadows are far preferable to snakes, frogs, crawfish and malarial fevers. Since such wet places have been reclaimed by draining, sickness is but a fraction of what it was half a century ago, for I have been here all these years, and more. Besides this, for each additional acre inundated on account of drainage there are twenty acres reclaimed. A farm well drained will stand the injury of a dry season, or of a wet one, much better than if left in a state of nature, besides being far more productive of health, wealth, and beauty.—E. Davenport, De Witt Co., Ill.

The work of feeding and looking after hens is light, and above all healthy, how much more so than bending over the washtub or sewing machine, and how much more independent is the position. Thus speaks the Massachusetts Ploughman. How many tired, overworked, and half paid females are today, shut up in the confined air of salesrooms and workshops, who might be breathing the healthful country air, running an honorable profitable business, and become interested enough in it to make themselves fully acquainted with it.

Prof. E. W. Stewart thus writes to the New England Farmer: "A variety of food is as important in pasturing as in stall feeding, and those pastures having the greatest variety of grasses are the best. Some old pastures contain a large number of varieties, each having its peculiar qualities of nutriment, aroma, and flavor. Such old pastures produce the finest flavored beef mutton, and milk. Too little care is taken in seeding for pasture to select a sufficient variety. The greater the variety the better for the thrift of the cattle. In addition to the standard timothy and clover, other varieties are valuable, such as blue grass or June grass, flat-stalked blue grass or wire grasses, rough-stalked meadow grass, meadow fescue, sheep fescue, orchard grass, red-top and sweet-scented vernal grass."

Nice Cookery.

Apple Marmalade.—Pare, core and cut in small pieces any kind of sour apple, and to every pound put in three-quarters of a pound of sugar. Put them in a preserving pan and boil over a slow fire until they are reduced to pulp. Turn into jelly jars and keep in a cool place.

Cream Onions.—Many people, who connot eat onions in the usual form, would enjoy them prepared as follows: Boil in two waters and drain; pour over them a little scalding milk, set over the fire, add a spoonful of butter and a little cream, season to taste, and serve hot.

Pickled Green-Tomatoes.—For one gallon of sliced green tomatoes, (salted and drained), take one quart of cider vinegar, one pound of sugar, one tablespoonful of mustard, cloves and allspice. Place all in a porcelain kettle over a fire, until the tomatoes are cooked tender: then drain them out, and boil the sirup down till just enough remains to cover them. They do not need sealing. Onions may be added if liked.

Spiced Currants.—Three pounds of sugar to seven pounds of currants, one teaspoonful of ground cinnamon, allspice and cloves. Boil one hour. Splendid!

Home-made Beer.—One pailful of soft water, half a pound of pressed hops, two ounces of white ginger, a quart of sirup, one cupful of yeast. Stand in a warm place for twelve hours. Skim well and bottle. It makes a pleasant drink, even with less sirup.

The Volume of Food.

When a man eats with moderation as to quantity of food, the per cent. of absorbed nutriment is greater than when he eats to excess. The consumption of immoderately large quantities of food is irrational for this reason alone; but, aside from the greater loss, there is a positive injury to the stomach by distending it beyond a proper limit. The feeling of satisfaction is also greatest after a moderate meal. We know full well that persons who have been accustomed to over-eat have a sensation of emptiness when they take only small quantities of aliment. Disturbances of digestion are also sure to follow excessive eating. It has been observed in the German army that the young peasants from a region of country where they have lived largely on potatoes, and been obliged to eat large quantities, suffer from emptiness when they become soldiers and are fed on a more concentrated diet. The sensation of fullness is absent until the stomach becomes used to it. The taking of an excessive amount of food leads not only to disturbances of digestion, but also to injury of the power of absorption, and this may become a serious matter. Moderation in eating and drinking should be the rule of life. To eat too little is injurious; it leads to poverty of blood, emaciation and weakness. To eat too much is in some respects better than to eat too little; but if the excess be considerable the injury will be considerable also.—Herald of Health.

Pleasant Homes.

Are we giving sufficient attention to home surroundings? Is it necessary to keep the chickens in the front yard? Can't we make a better use of the back yard than for an asylum for dilapidated wagons, unused sleighs and superannuated farm machinery? Do we realize, as we ride about the country attending to business, that our wives and little ones are obliged to spend most of their time at home? If there is any place on earth that should be beautiful, pleasant, enticing, restful, the fac-simile of heaven, it should be the home. It is heaven to the little ones. Many a child with a strong love for the farm and farming, has been disgusted and driven into other pursuits because the home surroundings were so desolate! Many a wealthy old farmer is to-day sitting in his childless home, who might have retained his brightest boy upon the farm as his helper and successor, had he made his home a little more attractive and pleasant! Oh! it pays to beautify the home.

Rot in Potatoes.

In comparative tests of 125 varieties of potatoes, at Rochester, last season, on heavy soil conducive to disease, a few sorts were markedly free from disease, says Mr. E. H. Libby, in our Country Home. Those showing no rot whatever, he says, were the Dakota Red, Rural Blush, Vick's Prize, St. Patrick, Garfield, Brownell's Best, Breesee's Advance, North Star, and Hancock. Those which rotted badly were Brownell's Superior, Jones's Seedling, Oswego, and Peachblow. Those showing a medium amount of rot were Wall's Orange, Arundel Rose, Pride of America, Magnum Bonum, Burbank, Mammouth Pearl, White Rose, Belle, James Vick, Early Mayflower, Early Rose, Beauty of Hebron, Dunmore, Boston Market, Early Vermont, and Parson's Prolific. To be wholly free from disease we should, Mr. Libby thinks, plant the disease resisting varieties on light soil, and use property made mineral fertilizers, which contain a considerable amount of potash.

Keeping Asparagus Fresh.

A German exchange vouches for the following: When cut the asparagus to be preserved is carefully wiped and then it is placed in a tub, the bottom of which has prevoiusly been covered with three inches of dry bran with which a little salt has peen mixed. The tub is filled by placing alternate layers of asparagus and of bran and salt in mixture about three inches thick. The tub is then closed by placing on the topmost layer of bran a large plateful of melted suet which has been allowed to partially cool. If stored in a dry place and kept from frost asparagus thus treated will keep fresh for one year; but when the tub is opened the whole of contens must be at once used, and therefore it would be advisable that the receptacle should be of small dimensions.

As to the Tart Strawberry.

As the strawberry season is at hand, a few ideas regarding the disposal of the delicious berry may be timely. Here is one of the best recipes for strawberry short cake: One pint sifted flour, ¼ teaspoonful salt, scant; ½ teaspoonful soda, measured after pulverizing; 1 full teaspoonful cream tartar (omit if sour if sour milk be used), mixed together and sift two or three times; ½ cup butter, 1 cup sweet or sour milk or cold water. Rub in the butter, or melt the butter, and add it hot with the milk, gradually mixing and cutting with a knife, and use just enough to make it of light, spongy consistency. Either bake in a griddle or in the oven. When baked tear open and spread each half of the cakes with softened butter. Put half of the cakes on a hot plate. Mash a pint of strawberries, sweeten to taste, put a large spoonful on each cake; then put another layer of cakes and whole berries, well sugared. Serve with cream.

Strawberry charlotte: Line a bowl with strawberries and fill with Bavarian cream. The cream is made up of ¼ box gelatine, ¼ cup cold water soaked together. Whip one pint of cream till you have three pints of the whip. Boil the remainder with ¼ cup sugar and when boiling add the gelatine. Add 1 teaspoonful vanilla. When the mixture is cold add whipped cream.

Strawberry sherbet: One pint berry juice, 1 pint sugar. 1 pint water, juice 2 lemons, 1 tablespoonful gelatine. Or, 1 pint preserved fruit, 1 cup sugar, 1 quart water, 2 lemons, tablespoonful gelatine.

Fresh Fashion Fancies.

The new linen collars have open embroidery.

Pongee makes the best traveling cloaks, as it does not crinkle or spoil in the rain.

Parasols are covered with squares of silk, and made highly ornate with embroidery, lace and ribbon.

The soft black thread laces will be fashionable, not only on black, but on ecru, grey and pale blue dresses.

A beautiful bonnet may be formed of narrow rows of lace put on full and trimmed with delicate blossoms.

Sash ribbons are hand-painted in large designs, Jacqueminot, Gloire and moss roses, tulips, lilies and asters are favorites.

A lovely cloth, the Albatross, comes in all the pretty art shades; it makes cool, dressy and comparatively inexpensive dresses as it requires no laundrying.

A bonnet of red quills is a curious novelty, the crown being of the quills, and the front trimmed with red ostrich tips. Braids of fanciful colors compose many bonnets.

Colored laces are marvels of finish; currant color, smoke-blue, gray, bronze terracotta, geranium, red, brown, myrtle-green, in addition to tints of cream and ivory white.

The suits of white embroidered muslin and lawn, made with three flounces around the skirt, with bask of embroidery, cannot fail to commend themselves, as they are easily laundried.

There is a revival of wraps, both long and short, to match summer dresses of light wool, linen or batiste. These are either made in the form of a pelisse, mantle or fichu, according to the material.

A leading pattern in the new brocaded silks which are exhibited at Messrs. Lord & Taylor's, is the passion flower. This is shown on evening tints, one of the loveliest being a white ground with the design in gold satin.

The harlequin stocking, in bright contrasting but artistic colors, is the latest thing in silk hosiery. One half of the leg and foot is of bright or dark color, the other half in a paler shade of the same or a contrasting tint.

STAGE DEATHS.

How Actors Receive Their Conceptions for Such Scenes.

From the Cleveland Leader.

W. E. Sheridan, the tragedian, stood before a mirror in a circumscribed room opening on the stage of the Academy of Music. Theatrical paraphernalia was littered everywhere. Costumes that might have been fashionable before the days of Shakespeare hung about the room pendent from pegs. A tiger skin stretched along the floor took up what space had not been relegated to boxes and bundles. On a long shelf placed breast-high beneath the mirror were strewn an extravagant display of cosmetics. Mr. Sheridan's lower extremities were already encased in black-colored knee-breeches and sable-hued stockings, and was busily engaged in "making up" to impersonate Bulwer's masterly conception of the celebrated Cardinal Richelieu.

"Where do actors get the ideas of the various death-scenes which they portray?" said Mr. Sheridan in answer to question of that character which had just been propounded. "Well, the death scene in 'Louis XI.' is almost an exact reproduction of what took place on the deathbed of my friend Ned Adams. His death was the result of a general breaking down of his constitution. I was then playing at the Chestnut street theatre in Philadelphia. During his last sickness the actors at the theatre were in the habit of sitting up with Adams by turns. On the night of his death I was with him, and his final throes impressed themselves most vividly upon my mind. It was from this principally that I constructed the culminary scene in 'Louis XI.'"

Mr. Sheridan had paused from his work for a moment in recollection of his friend's death, but soon began to rub an unguent into the skin of his face.

"When I first undertook to portray a death scene," continued Mr. Sheridan, making a few deft strokes with a black crayon, which on the stage would simulate the wrinkles of the cardinal, my conceptions were criticised by my physician. It was by his advice that I introduced the three final gasps which mark the culmination of the death struggle in 'Louis XI.' As to the picking at the covering and the other features, they are what I saw at the deathbed of poor Ned Adams. I do not think that you will find as a rule, that actors are frequent visitors at hospitals to witness such scenes. It is impossible to time your visit properly so as to often see exactly what you want so see, and in the second place actors find themselves pretty completely occupied with their studies and other work. Some time ago a physician made an appointment with me to witness the death throbs of a patient. It happened that I was unable to keep the engagement, and the man soon afterward got well."

By this time the actor, with the aid of cosmetics and dress, had almost completely transformed himself into his character.

"As Sir Giles Overreach," continued Mr. Sheriden after a moment's pause. "I die standing in my boots. Apoplexy is supposed to be the cause. In 'Othello' the death is likewise instantaneous. In simulating these deaths I am guided entirely by my own conception of such a scene. I never saw a man die from apoplexy, nor have I ever seen a man stabbed to death. Both are merely my individual creations of such scenes."

Thomas W. Keene was met in his apartments of the Weddell house.

"All the death scenes which I portray are of course violent in their character, from the massive and monumental despair of 'Othello' to the fatal termination of Richard's ambitious career," said Mr. Keene. "I got the idea of an appropriate death scene for 'Hamlet' from the mortal agonies of a man dying from poisoning at Washington hospital in Boston. One evening several years ago I went to that institution to study delirium tremens, which it was my design to portray in the drama 'Drink.' While there I found a patient in the death throes from some of the slower forms of poisoning—arsenical, I think. My death scene in 'Hamlet' is as nearly an exact representation of that as I can make it."

"Every legitimate actor," continued Mr. Keene, "makes nature a basis of his delineations, whether they be death scenes or otherwise. B natural death scene and a simulated death scene must be essentially different from an artistic standpoint. In a stage death the striking effects must be prominently produced. The idea that must govern the actor is relatively the same as that which governs the theatrical scene painter as compared with the oil painter. The gross effects are sought after. In portraying sudden deaths very little finesse is required."

At this point Mr. Keene was interrupted by the entrance of another caller, and the reporter withdrew.

Here are extracts from letters written by people in different parts of the country who have not the shadow of a reason to make misstatements. They have not been bribed or bought. They speak right up, briefly and to the point.

Southward Flow of Capital.

The flow of capital into the southern states continues at a tremendous rate, and if there is no check to the movement the next census will reveal some wonderful changes in that section of the republic. According to the Baltimore Manufacturers' Record, the money invested in new mining and manufacturing enterprises in the south since the 1st of January this year amounts to the great sum of $55,504,000. The most of this has gone in the states of Alabama, Virginia, Kentucky, Texas, Tennessee and Florida, in the order named. The heaviest investments of capital have been in coal mining and iron manufacturing companies, though a considerable portion of this capital has, of course, gone into various other industries, such as cotton and wollen mills, flour mills, saw mills, machine shops, &c. In Alabama, more than in any other State, mining and iron making have been the favorite investments. The apparent fondness of North Carolinians for small enterprises is remarkable. There are more cotton mills in that State then in any other in the South, and yet, with two exceptions, they are small as compared with Georgia and South Carolina mills; and so it is in other branches of manufactures. Factories are increasing by the dozen, but most of them are of moderate dcapacity.

Two high-bred women—one from New York, the other from Boston—happened to meet in what the Boston Traveller ironically calls a "social" circle. Both were rich and accomplished, and both claimed to have ancestors. Boston in the course of a little conversation between the two, alluded in the most seemingly unpretentious way, to the trivial circumstance that her ancestors came over in the Mayflower. "Ah!" replied New York, with a little lift of her eyebrows expressive of innocent surprise, "I did not know before that the Mayflowers brought over any steerage passengers."

In 1880 the blondes were but 23, the brunettes 52, and the intermediates 25. The change so far as his observations go, has been gradual.

Junior Vice Commander.

Mr. A. G. Alford, Junior Vice Department Commander of Md., G. A. R., Baltimore, Md., writes: "I have kept St. Jacobs Oil by me and always found it a ready remedy for pains, aches and bruises. When suffering terribly a few weeks since with an ulcerated tooth, I could not get any rest, and I applied it. I was instantly relieved, and my suffering ceased from that time."

The intellect that directs the bee lines in Life, under the caption of "How to Handle Bees," says a bee is not a very difficult thing to handle. He is as easily picked up as a strawberry, is reasonably light and compressible. To handle him is, therefore, a mere song. Any man can do it. In fact the more ignorant of bees a man is the more easily he can handle one. The main difficulty seems to be in quieting the man down after he has handled a small, but frolicsome bee. There have been men known to race around a 10 acre lot, and eventually lose their salvation, after handling one bee for the tenth part of a second. What the country really needs is an article on how to avoid handling bees."

The Pennsylvania Medical Society have admitted women to membership.

The trite saying of good Bishop Berkeley, "Westward the course of Empire takes its way," is daily verified by events. Not least significant among these is the fact that the state department at Washington has just purchased a number of Rockford Quick Train Railroad watches to be given by President Arthur to Captains of foreign vessels in testimony of our Governments appreciation of their gallantry in saving the lives of American seamen. A few years ago Geneva watches only would have been considered good enough for such a purpose; now, among many competitors, the movements made at this far Western factory are selected as being the best examples of human skill in delicate handiwork.

CANCER

The experience in the treatment of Cancer with Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) would seem to warrant us in saying that it will cure this much dreaded scourge. Persons so afflicted are invited to correspond with us.

I believe Swift's Specific has saved my life. I had virtually lost use of the upper part of my body and my arms from the poisonous effects of a large cancer on my neck, from which I had suffered for 20 years. S. S. S. has relieved me of all soreness, and the poison is being forced out of my system. I will soon be well. W. R. Robison, Davisboro, Ga.

Two months ago my attention was called to the case of a woman afflicted with a cancer on her shoulder at least 5 inches in circumference, angry, painful, and giving the patient no rest day or night for 6 months I obtained a supply of Swift's Specific for her. She has taken 5 bottles, and the ulcer is entirely healed up, only a very small scab remaining and her health is better than for 5 years past; seems to be perfectly cured. Rev. Jesse H. Campbell, Columbus, Ga.

I have seen remarkable results from use of Swift's Specific on a cancer. A young man near here has been afflicted five years with the most angry looking eating cancer I ever saw, and was nearly dead. The first bottle made a wonderful change, and after five bottles were taken, he is nearly or quite well. It is truly wonderful. M. F. Crumley, M. D., Oglethorpe, Ga.

Answer This.

Is there a person living who ever saw a case of ague, billiousness or neuralgia, or any disease of the stomach, liver or kidney that Hop Bitters will not cure?

My mother says Hop Bitters is the only thing that will keep her from severe attacks of paralysis and headache. Ed. Oswego Sun.

My little sickly, puny baby, was changed into a great bouncing boy and I was raised from a sick bed by Using Hop Bitters a short time.
A Young Mother.

No use to worry about any Liver, Kidney or Urinary Trouble, especially Bright's Disease or Diabetes as Hop Bitters never fails of a cure where a cure is possible.

I had severe attacks of gravel and Kidney trouble; was unable to get any medicine or doctor to cure me until I used Hop Bitters. They cured me in a short time. T. R. Atty.

Unhealthy or inactive kidneys cause gravel, Bright's disease, rheumatism, and a horde of other serious and fatal diseases, which can be prevented with Hop Bitters if taken in time.

Ludington, Mich., Feb. 2, 1879. I have sold Hop Bitters for four years, and there is no medicine that surpasses them for bilious attacks, kidney complaints and all diseases incident to this malarial climate. H. T. Alexander.

Monroe, Mich., Sept. 25, 1875. Sirs—I have been taking Hop Bitters for inflammation of kidneys and bladder, it has done for me what four doctors failed to do—cured me. The effect of the Bitters seemed like magic to me.
W. L. Carter.

Gents—Your Hop Bitters have been of great value to me. I was laid up with typhoid for over two months, and could get no relief until I tried your Hop Bitters. To those suffering from debility or any one in feeble health, I cordially recommend them. J. C. Stoetzel, 638, Fulton st., Chicago, Ill.

Max. Eriesson has purchased from J. L. Bailey the lot adjoining his property on Ash street.

Geo. Warninger, now of Ada, was in our city last Monday and reports everything lovely in Ada.

The work on Ellis & Johnson's building is being pushed as fast as possible and will soon be completed.

Koeppe & Swanson have finished a kiln of 125,000 brick and started the fires under it this morning.

E. M. Walsh, Max. Eriesson and Wentzel & Rauch are putting a ten foot sidewalk in front of their business houses on Main Street.

The summer garden on Barrett's addition opened up June 1st. The C. C. B. was in attendance and discoursed some fine music. Quite a crowd assembled at the grove and everything passed off very quietly.

A. P. Bond, John Watts, and James Ryan went to Warren last week where Judge Stearns was holding court and were admitted to the Bar. These gentlemen are all well known in this city. The JOURNAL extends congratulations and wishes them success.

Mr O. S. Paulson, who went out to the Cœur d' Alene mines early this spring, returned on Saturday last. He says that country is largely overestimated and business wholly overdone. While he thinks there is gold there he does not believe it exists in as large quantities as has been represented and he would advise all who intend to go to consider well before they decide to do so.

THE CITY OF CROOKSTON.

One of the Growing young Cities of Northwestern Minnesota-Business Opportunities.

The Remarkable Growth and Unsurpassed Advantages of the Coming Manufacturing Center

Special Correspondence of the Minneapolis Tribune.

CROOKSTON, May 24th.—It is only a few years ago that the northwestern part of Minnesota embraced in the valley of the Red River of the North was looked upon as unfit for settlement and cultivation, and when those who were venturesome enough to penetrate into this part of the State began to report that portions of it were fertile and suitable for agricultural purposes, they were generally disbelieved, until they were able by actual experiment to prove the truth of their statements. Since then the wildest visions of these men have been exceeded by the rapidity with which this portion of Minnesota has been subdued by the hardy settler. The green sod of the prairie has been transformed into vast wheat fields, and the homes of the enterprising farmers meet the view in every direction. Thriving towns, villages, and cities are located along the lines of railroad that are rapidly extending their iron bands over the entire Northwest.

Of the towns that have arisen in this valley during this time, none can be looked upon with more admiration than the city of Crookston. It has so improved its natural advantages as a commercial center for the country surrounding the city that it is justly entitled to rank as the most important town of northwestern Minnesota. The history of its growth in population, wealth and commercial importance, told in the sober language of truth, would sound like the wildest fables of the East, and would not be credited, but the unbeliever has only to see to be convinced.

In 1879 what is now the city of Crookston.

WAS A SMALL HAMLET,

with a few hundred inhabitants. Today Crookston has a population of 5,000 and for energy, pluck, and business enterprise will compare favorably with any city in the West. The growth of Crookston, though rapid, has been of a very solid and substantial character, and every indication now pointst to its continuing so. The city has no been built on a boom, but has advanced steadily and surely to the position it now occupies, and there is no fear of the re-action which, sooner or later, overtakes towns that have been boomed into prominence. The commercial advantages of Crookston are such as to insure the continuance of its prosperity, and the influential business men of the city show their confidence in its future welfare by the substantial public improvements, public buildings, and business blocks that have been erected during the last three years.

The Court House is a large, handsome brick structure on a stone foundation, and is a credit to the city and county. In the first story are located the county offices, which are commodious and convenient, and fitted up with regard to the permanency and safety of the records of the county. On the second floor is located the court-room, which is conveniently arranged for the transaction of business, and well furnished.

The city has about completed a large and elegant High School building costing $25,000, which is a credit to the city, and shows the deep interest our citizens take in educational matters. This High School, together with the other schools in the city in charge of a corps of able teachers, furnish educational facilities that compare favorably with like institutions in any part of the country.

THE RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS

have attractive and commodious church edifices, and are in good working order.

Several of the leading benevolent societies have lodges located here in a flourishing condition.

There is in operation a system of water works which is capable of furnishing 1,000,000 gallons of water daily, the water mains being laid in the business portions of the city, furnishing good protection from fire.

An efficient telephone system is in operation, and is extensively used by the business men of the city, and numbers of the prominent business men have their places of business lighted by electric lights.

Two solid and substantial banking institutions take care of the financial affairs of the city.

The Merchants Bank of Crookston has a capital and surplus of $63,000, and does a good business in a safe manner. It is the oldest bank located here. The bank building is of brick, two stories high, the upstairs being used for offices, the building presenting a handsome appearance, and is a credit to the owners.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,

is located at the corner of Broadway and Second Streets. The building is a handsome two-story brick structure, fitted out in good style, suitable to the character of its business. That this bank is doing a profitable business is shown by the fact that it has lately increased its capital stock from $50,000 to $100,000.

On Main Street and Broadway, and the streets intersecting them, the business men are located in commodious buildings, largely built of brick, and suitable to the demands of their large and increasing business. On the corner of Broadway and Fletcher Street an Opera House is now in process of erection. When finished it will have a seating capacity of 1,500 people; and in the different portions of the city new business blocks are being erected to meet the business wants of the community. All over the city is seen the evidence of a steady growth, which can not fail to impress the beholder with the substantial character and permanency of the city's progress.

There is a substantial foundation for this steady and prosperous growth, aside from the purely commercial advantages that Crookston enjoys by reason of its location. The city is located so as to be able to utilize the immense water power furnished by the Red Lake River, and to build up a manufacturing business here that will make Crookston the manufacturing center of northwest Minnesota. That

THIS IS NO DREAM.

Any one will be convinced if he will come here and inspect the succession of water power that the river is capable of affording almost within the city limits, and if he will take into account the immense quantities of raw material for manufacturing purposes this country is capable of producing.

It is conceded by every one that in the near future the greater portion of the wheat raised in this section of the country will be manufactured into flour before it is sent into the markets of the world; and this being the case, Crookston is so located that it is the center of the wheat producing district of western Minnesota, not only geographically, but it is the railroad center. So that, taking all things into consideration, no one can doubt that in the course of a short time Crookston will become important as a milling town. It may not be second to Minneapolis, but it will be of sufficient importance to give it a recognized standing as a milling center, possessing natural advantages that will enable it to compete with any city in the Union.

That millers located at this point can successfully compete with older milling points has already been practically demonstrated. One of the water-powers located in the city limits has been improved, a part of which is now being utilized to furnish the motive power for which has been in constant operation since last October.

The Valley Roller Mills is situated on the right bank of the river, on the west side of the St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Manitoba Railway depot grounds. The mill is a five story building, 40x72 feet, built on a solid foundation. The machinery in the mill is of the latest improved style, consisting of seven double sets of rollers, one run of stone for grinding feed, and all other necessary machinery required in a mill of that size to manufacture the best brands of flour. The capacity of the mill is 250 barrels per day, and is operated to its full capacity. The energetic proprietors have already established a fine profitable trade in the Eastern market, and find a ready sale for all the mill can produce.

Across the river from the Valley Roller Mill, and operated by the same water power, is the Crookston Roller Mill. This building is 40x60 feet, four stories high, and furnished throughout with modern mill machinery. The capacity of this mill is 250 barrels of flour daily, and it finds a ready sale for all it can manufacture.

Some persons may doubt these mills being able to compete with the mills of Minneapolis and other large milling centres; but notwithstanding, they are able to do so successfully, and the reason for it is found in the fact that the mills of Minneapolis and other points have to use the many that are grown in the different localities from which they draw their supplies, and as these wheats vary materially in quality and excellence for milling purposes, the millers are unable to keep their brands of flour as uniform as they would be if all the wheat used was of a uniform quality and kind. The mills of Crookston being located in the centre of the hard wheat belt of the Red River Valley are able to obtain and use hard wheat of a uniform quality and grade, and are, therefore able to put upon the market brands of flour of uniform quality. This one fact alone is sufficient to enable the mills here to compete with any mills in the world.

The water power already improved is capable of furnishing as much more power as is already used, and other parties are now looking it over with a view to building other mills; and from present prospects the day is not far distant when most of the No. 1 hard wheat raised in this section of country will be manufactured into flour at Crookston.

Another branch of manufacturing is now being established here. T. B. Walker of the extensive lumbering firm of Camp & Walker, Minneapolis, has erected and nearly completed a large saw mill at Crookston, which will be ready for operation by the 1st of June.

The main building is an immense structure two stories high. The boiler and engine house is a wing to the main building, and several other buildings, comprising shops and offices, are located in the vicinity. The piling yard is reached by a track from the mill, and is located between the mill and the main line of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad. A side track from the railroad runs into the yard, furnishing every desirable facility.

SHIPPING LUMBER

to any part of the Northwest. The mill is built upon the plans of Mr. Walker himself, and he inspects every part of the work, and mill men who have seen the mill pronounce it one of the best in the country. None but the best and latest improved machinery is being used in the mill, some of the improvements having been suggested by T. B. Walker himself, who is a practical sawmill man of as extensive experience as any sawmill man in the Northwest. The mill is furnished with a gang of thirty-two saws, a large double rotary, a slabbing gang edger, and cut off saws, steam feed, and a steam nigger for turning the logs. The lumber travels to its different destinations in the mill on live rollers. Automatic machinery is used in every part of the mill, and everything about the mill and yard is being arranged with a special reference to the saving of time and labor, and the proprietor thinks there is no other mill in the country that can beat it in that respect. The capacity of the mill will be 150,000 feet per diem, though the superintendent claims that it can be increased to 200,000 feet if the occasion requires. This enterprise will to over two hundred men in all the branches of the business connected with it. To the stranger, coming into Crookston from over the vast prairie regions devoid of timber, the first impression will be one of surprise at seeing a large and well equipped sawmill, without any signs of timber growing anywhere near to supply the logs to make the lumber out of, and when he learns that a supply of 26,000,000 feet of logs is on the way to be manufactured at this mill, he will naturally ask where such a supply comes from. This question he can settle for himself by looking at the map of this section of Minnesota, for he will find that the Red Lake River is the outlet for all the pine timber that is located in what is known as the Red Lake region of Minnesota, a tract of country which has been kept in the background, and known to but a few to be rich in large forests of white pine, as valuable as any in Minnesota. From the fact that a portion of this tract is included in an Indian reservation, the impression has gone abroad, and not been contradicted by those knowing better, that all the pine of any value was included in the reservation, and consequently no effort has been made until recently to.

EXPLORE THIS SECTION of country. The tract of country covered by these vast forests of pine extends from the headwaters of the Mississippi to the southern shore of Red Lake and thence on the east side of the lake up to and around the northern shore. The country to the south of the lake is traversed by the Clearwater River and its numerous branches, which reach in all directions through the pine forests, and furnish good facilities for driving the logs to a desirable place of manufacturing. The Clearwater empties into the Red Lake River at a point twenty miles above Crookston.

The country around the shores of the lake is intersected by numerous streams which empty into the lake, and logs can easily be brought down these streams and through the lake into the Red Lake River. This makes it certain that the principal point for manfacturing the lumber must be located on the Red Lake River somewhere below the mouth of the Clearwater.

That this town will be Crookston no one can doubt, if he will take the pains to look into the matter. The character of the river is such that only a limited area can be used for storing and booming logs, the only places that can be used for such purposes being in the vicinity of Crookston, thus compelling the mills to be located here. In addition to this the town is so situated, with regard to railroad facilities, that manufacturers can ship their lumber on a direct line of railroad north from Crookston to any point between here and Winnipeg, and west by the Devils Lake extension to any part of northern Dakota, thus giving them access to one of the of the world. And in addition to the present railroad facilities a new line of railroad is now in process of construction, which will give Crookston direct railroad connection with central and southern Dakota.

Mr. T. B. Walker now owns large tracts of these pine lands, on the Clearwater River, outside of the limits of the Indian reservation, which will give his mill at Crookston a supply of 300,000,000 feet of logs to be cut and manufactured into lumber at this place. Therr is still plenty of pine timber located on the same streams besides that owned by Mr. Walker, and any one wanting to engage in the lumber business can get a good supply of timber of easy access to a convenient point for manufacturing.

While the pine timber in this region outside the reservation is sufficient in quantity to furnish several mills a good supply for a number of years, it is only a small portion of what will eventually come into the market, and which must of necessary be manufactured on the Red Lake River.

It is now certain that within the next three years the pine on the Red River Reservation will be opened to purchasers, offering to manufacturers of lumber one of the finest fields of operations ever seen in the Northwest, and furnishing a supply of timber that will keep a dozen large mills in operation from twenty-five to thirty years.

That these mills will be located at Crookston we have every reason to believe. The first of the mills is already here, and the same business prudence and foresight that led Mr. Walker to locate his mill here, will lead to the same location of the others. In fact negotiations are almost concluded for two more saw mills at this place.

I have endeavored to give the facts in this article as they appear to the unprejuniced mind; and if they seem marvelous to outsiders all that your correspondent can say is, that those who do not credit the statements made can come and see for themselves, and they cannot fail to be convinced.

The future of Crookston is sure to be prosperous and flourishing, and the city bids fair to be the metropolis of the Red River Valley, the centre of its commercial and manufacturing enterprises.

CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.

It is rare that warm weather holds off so long. The prospect for summer watering-places is dim enough any way owing to financial causes, and when cold weather is added, the outlook is certainly gloomy.

The panic in New York was of short duration, and its effects almost entirely local. Rotten firms and institutions in other states which would have inevitably exploded in a short time, have gone up a little quicker for the New York flurry, but on the whole, its effects have not been disastrous.

It is well enough for those who can afford the luxury to enjoy Florida winters, and it is a pity that more cannot do so, but when people talk about going down there to engage in farming for the year round, either stock-raising, gardening, or anything else, they are simply talking nonsense.

The present average rate of duty on sugar under our tariff (1.95 cents per pound) is exactly the wholesale price of raw sugar in the London market—namely, 1 penny per pound. Grocery sugars sell in the same market at 2 pence (3.90 cents) and loaf at 2½ pence (4.87 cents). It will thus be seen that at the present prices of raw sugar in London the United States duty is 100 per cent.

We are likely to have cheap beef as well as cheap bread during the present year, despite the croaking based on the alledged great destruction of cattle in the west by the severe weather of the past winter. A careful servey of the beef producing fields leads an experienced cattle man to the belief that the prospect is very fine, and that we will have a larger and better supply than for ten years past.

One of the secret drains on public prosperity is the loss from fire. The destruction from this source is reckoned at one hundred million dollars annually, which must either be met by individuals who take their own risks or by the business public generally through a tax in the shape of insurance large enough to enable insurance companies to meet losses with a margin of profit to themselves. This large and steady drain is almost a dead loss, damage by fire realizing fewer compensating advantages to the community than almost any other form of individual hardship.

Rev. George Worthington, D. D., just elected Episcopal Bishop of Nebraska, was born in Massachusetts in 1842, was educated in New York, graduating from Hobart College in 1860, and three years later from the Theological General Assembly of New York. His deaconate was passed in the ministry at Troy, N. Y., where he remained a year and a half. His first parish was at Balston Spa., and there he remained until 1868, when, at the age of 26 years, he was called to St. John's parish in Detroit, Michigan, where he has since labored. His great work was long since recognized by the episcopacy, and he came very near being elected Bishop of Michigan, some years ago.

Beer manufacturers are more celebrated than statesmen. A St. Louis paper mourns because there are many people in every civilized nation of the two hemispheres who never heard of Thomas H. Benton, but with whom the names of Anheuser, Best and Lemp are familiar words. Inventors of articles in common use are very much better known than philosophers or writers, while the name of the Slugger Sullivan of Boston is familiar to thousands, perhaps millions, who never heard of Daniel Webster. Poetic fame is neither extended nor of long life. Possibly Longfellow and Bryant may live out the century, but their names are absolutely unknown to half their countrymen. Shakespeare and Burns may be considered immortal beside the thousands of small beer poets who now fill the magazines with senile trash, but how many millions there are who never heard these names mentioned.

Mr. Russell Sage, the great stock speculator of New York, is paying dear for being on the wrong side of the fence during the late panic. He has paid $6,000,000 and the end is not yet. These "puts," the uninitiated will understand, are privileges he sold to Tom, Dick and Harry to put certain stocks to him at certain prices. That is to say, he bet these buyers of his privileges that he could out-guess them as to the turn of the market. There was not a dollar's worth of genuine business in the $6,000,000. It was the most gigantic gambling ever done, perhaps, by any man in the world. It is deeply to be deplord that the result does not wipe him out. Nor should there be the slightest sympathy for any of the bettors if he should leave them unpaid.

Assuming that the tariff will not be disturbed by the present Congress, either at this session or the short one of next winter—and that seems to be reasonably certain—it follows that the present duties on imports and the existing internal taxes will remain as they are until the 30th of June, 1886, as the Congress which will come in next year will hardly make any changes to take effect sooner than that. If nothing unforeseen shall occur, therefore, to interfere with the application of surplus revenue to the reduction of the public debt, the total amount of 3-per-cent bonds now outstanding will all be paid off in the next two years.

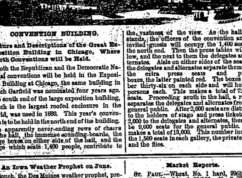
British Taffy to Americans.

An annual dinner in London for the benefit of the general theatrical fund, was held on Thursday evening, the 29th. Henry Irving presided. Ellen Terry was present. Irving, replying to a toast to his health, proposed by Toole, said:

The hopes with which his American tour was begun had been more than realized. He trusted the unbouded favor accorded with the English company by the Americans would be monumental in the history of the English stage. I cannot express my gratitude for the generosity and kindliness of the Americans. They did all possible to make us feel that America was home and not a land of strangers. They worshipped at the shrine of the fair lady who graced the banquet that evening. Above all, we brought from America most profound impressions of love of Americans toward the mother country. The new friends we made in America will doubtless cordially greet us when we revisit their shores.



CONVENTION BUILDING.

Picture and Descriptions of the Great Exposition Building in Chicago, Where Both Conventions will be Held.

Both the Republican and the Democratic National conventions will be held in the Exposition Building at Chicago, the same building in which Garfield was nominated four years ago. The south end of the large exposition building, which is the largest roofed enclosure in the world, was used in 1880. This year's convention is to be held in the north end of the building. The apparently never-ending rows of chairs in the hall, the immense sounding-boards, the large boxes on either side of the hall, and the stage which seats 1,400 people, contribute to the vastness of the view. As the hall now stands, the officers of the convention and the invited guests will occupy the 1,400 seats at the north end. Then the press tables will follow, and the next to them the delegates and alternates. Aisle on either sides of the seats for the delegates and alternates separate them from the extra press seats and private boxes, the latter painted red. The boxes number thirty-six on each side and will hold ten persons each. This makes a total of 720 box seats. Proceeding south in the hall, a railing separates the delegates and alternates from the general public. After 2,000 seats are distrituted to the holders of stage and press tickets and 2,000 to the delegates and alternates, there will be 9,000 seats for the general public. This makes a total of 13,000. This number includes the 1,500 seats in each gallery, the private boxes and the flies.

An Iowa Weather Prophet on June.

Couch, the Des Moines weather prophet, predicts that the warm days of June will be near the dates, 3d, 5th, 8th, 11th, 14th, 19th, 24th and 28th; the cooler days near the 3d, 4th, 7th, 9th, 12th, 17th, 22d, 26th and 30th. A lengthened period of sunny sky will occur near the 12th, during which Venus can be watched, and she will be noticed to waltz up within a few degrees of Jupiter, making her obeisance the 19th, and then will chassez back toward the west in retrograde motion, moving thus till Aug. 2. There will be no frosts for June, unless during the first part, most likely near the 9th. "I can see no frosts for July," he adds. "There will be a tropical cyclone near the 20th with exhibitions of marked phenomena near the 15th and 22d.

The Marriage of the Midgets.

London Cable: The marriage of the midgets "Gen. Mite" and Millie Edwards of Manchester, was a very interesting event. After the civil marriage at the register's office there was an imposing religous ceremony in a large public hall, which was elaborately decorated with flags and flowers and packed with people. Among the features of the decoration was a large wedding cake, in which the bride and groom could easily have stood, and which, after being exhibited, was cut and distributed in little satin-covered boxes to the ladies of the audience as they left the hall. The band of the Third dragoons was in attendance, and played a wedding march as the unique procession came down the aisle. The bride's costume was of cream-colored satin, with pearls and orange blossoms, and the groom wore a full-dress uniform and a sword of a major-general in the United States army. The bridesmaids were Miss Thornton, a local belle of Manchester, and Miss Alice Flynn, the groom's sister, and the general's best man was Herr Alpis, a German dwarf. The officiating clergyman was Rev. Mr. Mackle, a presbyterian minister, who performed the ceremony solemnly and impressively and delivered a touching oration. After the customary tears and embraces, the happy little couple were driven to the station to begin their honeymoon tour of the continent.

The Dakota Bogus Scrip Cases.

Yankton Special: Among the cases to be tried at this term of the federal court begun Tuesday at this city were those of E. E. Carpenter and J. D. Cameron, charged with making and selling bogus land scrip. Preparatory to the trial of these cases the government had assembled here over 100 witnesses, some from St. Louis and a number from other distant points. And now, when all things are ready for the trial, E. E. Carpenter, the central figure, in the case, is not here. His bail, $14,000, mostly furnished by his father and brothers, and it is understood it will not be valuable to the government in case it is forfeited. Without him it is doubtful if the other cases will go on, as evidence relied on to convict E. E. Carpenter is the keystone of the whole case against all the parties, implicated in the Santa Fe scrip business.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

In the senate, on Monday, the 26th, the judiciary committee reported favorably (Mr. Garland dissenting) the bill for two more Dakota supreme court associate justices. The senate, in the face of an adverse recommendation by the judiciary committee, concurred in the house amendment to the bill extending for one year the duration of the court of Alabama claims. The Utah bill was considered and Senator Brown of Georgia offered the following amendment: That voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with one of the opposite sex not husband or wife of such married person, shall be a cause, and the only cause, for absolute divorce in the District of Columbia or in the territories of the United States; but the courts may, in proper cases, as at common law, grant divorces from bed and board in said district, the territories or other places subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. White of Minnesota introduced into the house a bill granting a pension to Charles Brandt. The pension claims of Brainard N. Theeders of Henderson, Minn., and Ellen D. Woolsley of Bonnell's Mill's Minn., have been allowed. There also has been an adverse decision in the case of William S. Grave of Montevideo, Minn. Mr. Strait will appeal to the secretary of the interior from the decision. Bills were introduced into the house abolishing license taxes on tobacco dealers; punishing with fine and imprisonment bank officers obtaining loans from the banks with which they are connected which result in loss to those banks; pensioning all honorably discharged soldiers of the Rebellion who are forty-five years old.

Senator Ingalls has reported to the senate from the committee on judiciary a substitute for the joint resolution introduced by Senator Jackson proposing an amendment to the constitution in relation to the term of office of president and vice president. The amendment provided for in Ingalls' substitute is as follows.

Article 2. Executive power shall be vested in the president of the United States of America. The president and vice president hereafter elected shall hold their term of office for six years; but the president shall not be re-eligible, nor shall the vice president be eligible to the office of president if he shall have exercised the same in case of a vacancy therein.

Robinson of New York never misses a bill day without the introduction of some measure to carry out the peculiar view he holds on our foreign relations. His last proposition, which was introduced Monday, is to prohibit any senator or member of congress from receiving or paying visits from or to the ambassadors of foreign countries without the permission of the house to which he belongs. This is supposed to be aimed at Congressman Hewitt, who is on terms of intimacy with the British minister.

Mr. Cameron (Pa.) appeared in the senate Tuesday morning, and the senators congratulated him on his safe return and improved health.

The senate took up the bill to grant the Cinnabar & Clarks Forks Railroad company the right of way through a portion of the Yellowstone Park. Mr. Logan opposed the bill. There was, he said, a disposition to gobble up everything in connection with the park by the railroads and hotel companies. He (Logan) had found herds of cattle and horses in the park. A department of the United States government had divided up into seven parts the ten acres which the law allowed to be rented to one company, and placed one company in possession of all hotel privileges in the park and driven everybody else out, and now congress unwisely asks the tract to be made a fooball to be kicked about by men outside of it for their personal gain. Mr. Vest gave some details of the park, and said every word stated by Logan was true. Although congress had absolutely forbidden monopoly, it had been permitted, and the park was under the control of a private corporation.

In a debate in the senate on the Utah bill Mr. Brown of Georgia said it was a shameful violation of the constitution. He contrasted what he termed polygamy in New England and polygamy in Utah. The picture he drew, he said, was drawn "more in sorrow than in anger." There had been over 27,000 divorces granted in New England within the last twenty years, destroying 57,000 families, and turning loose 54,000 persons to marry again, all illegally, except those who were divorced for adultery or fornication in the other party. Mr Hoar of Mass. replied that if he cared to follow the style of argument followed by Mr. Brown, he could say some things, without even referring to statistics, which would be sufficiently disagreeable. With a desire to credit the portion of the country from which that senator came with as much propriety as he could, Hoar thought that the presence of a large number of mullattos remained to be accounted for in some way, but he would not enter upon this sort of argument.

In the Wallace McKinley contested election case the House on the 27th proceeded to vote upon the minority resolution declaring McKinley entitled to his seat. It was lost—yeas, 108 nays 158. The following Democrats voted with the Republicans in affirmative: Blackburn, Dorsheimer, Hurd, Mills, Potter, Robertson (Ky.), and Thompson. White (Ky.) voted with the Democrats. The majority resolution seating Wallace was adopted without division, and that gentleman appeared at the bar and took the oath of office.

Senator Slater, from the committee on public lands, reported favorably the bill to forfeit the unearned lands granted to the Northern Pacific road. The bill provides that—

In all cases where persons have settled upon any of the lands affected by the grant and forfeited, or have made improvements on them with bona fide intention of purchasing the same of the Northern Pacific company, and are entitled to enter them under the pre-emption or homestead laws, such persons proving the same to the satisfaction of the commissioner of the general land office, shall be entitled to enter not more than 160 acres, including his settlement or improvement at a specified rate per acre. Other persons, not embraced in this provision, shall have time in which to remove any growing crop and all moveable improvements. In all cases where the Northern Pacific has selected or shall hereafter select any lands in place of lands within the limits of the grant, but excepted from the operation thereof, which were or shall be occupied by a bona fide settler at the time of such selection such settler shall be entitled to purchase 160 acres of land, to be by him selected of the Northern Pacific, by paying therefore the sum of $1.25 per acre, and shall have twelve months in which to make payment therefor, after notice of the selection of his land by said company; the said 160 acres to include the settlement and improvement of the settler claiming the benefit of this section.

When, in the morning, after a hard night's sleep, one sits down to refresh himself with a cup of "choice old Government Java," of the male berry kind, it is useless for him to vex his soul with the thought that lead, copper, arsenic, chrome yellow, Silesian blue, yellow ochre, burnt amber, Venetian red and French chalk have been employed to improve the complexion of luxury. He might as well follow for the remainder of his life the forty day example of the illustrious Tanner, as attempt to abstain from articles of food and drink that are not under suspicion of being adulterated.

It is a remarkable fact that from the introduction of the flint-lock in 1635 to that of the percussion cap about 1830—a period of nearly two hundred years—no improvements whatever was made in the fire-arms of infantry troops. The British fought at Waterloo with the same arms they used at Blenheim. Three regiments with breech-loaders under Napoleon at Waterloo would have caused history to be written in a very different shape from what is now recorded.

It is the opinion of Rev. Dr. Eccleston that San Francisco is the Paris of America in the fondness of the people for amusement, their love of display, their disregnard of religion and their reckless habits of speculation. He also notes that California has proportionately more suicides than any other state, and finds prolific causes in dissipation, financial embarrassment and domestic trouble.

The origin of the phrase "He's a brick" is this; A European king visited an Eastern monarch, whose city was not walled, and he was asked why the city was not walled as many others were. The monarch asked his guest to accompany him to the outskirts of the city, where he showed him a vast army in camp. "That" said he, "is my wall; every man is a brick."

J. B. Gilfillan Nominated for Congress.

The Republican congressional convention for the Fourth Minnesota district, held Wednesday in Minneapolis, was a succession of surprises, not altogether unwarranted, however, by the events developed during the preliminary canvass. Albert Sheffer's name was not presented as a candidate and Hennepin county did not vote at all, and the friends of Scheffer nominated Hon. J. B. Gilfillan of Minneapolis as the republican candidate, and he accepted.

The convention was called to order by O. H Pettit, chairman of the district committee. After the preliminaries of the reading of the call, J. H. Thompson nominated for temporary chairman Maj. George A. Camp; and Gen. William R. Marshall, L. K. Stannard, Chairman Pettit ordered a call of the counties, and the roll being called, the vote stood Camp 26, Stannard 25. A. M. Dare was appointed secretary, and subsequently the temporary officers were made permanent officers of the convention.

The chair appointed as committee on credentials R. O. Benton, F. G. Ingersoll, J. H. Murphy, E. G. Clough, Col. Hicks, T. O. Porter, M. C. Tombler. The committee reported the names of uncontested delegates from Hennepin Wright, Sherburne, Isanti, Chisago, Pine, Anoka, Kennabec, and Ramsey counties, and also the credentials of the contesting delegations from Washington county.

Mr. Pettit moved that the Washington county delegation headed by Fayette Marsh and R. F. Hersey be admitted to the convention, and ex-Governor Marshall moved as an amendment that the delegation headed by George F. Sabin be declared entitled to seats on the floor. It was then decided that each contested delegation should be allowed thirty minutes for hearing and there was objection to that course. After hearing both sides Mr. Barker of Wright moved, that both original motion and the amendment be laid on the table. Carried 26 to 25. This left Washington county out of the convention Mr. Barker moved that a majority of the convention be sufficient to determine the choice of a candidate. The question being upon the amendment offered by Mr. Barker, the motion was adopted by a vote of 26 to 25. Mr. Barker presented the name of John B. Gilfillan and Mr. Davis presented the name of Saren Fletcher.

On the balloting Col. Benton of Hennepin rose and said that as one county, (Washington) had been entirely disfranchised in the convention, and as the convention was not a legally constituted representative body, Hennepin county declined to cast its vote at all. When Wright county was reached Mr. Stacy on the part of that county took practically the same attitude as had Col. Benton for Hennepin, and the vote was concluded. The result showing as follows:

Ramsey	15
Isanti	1
Kennabec	11
Chisago	4
Pine	1
Shereburne	1
Total	26

No other counties voting.

The chairman Major Camp declared Mr. Gilfillan the candidate for congress, and after some time Mr. Gilfillan made his appearance and accepted the nomination.

Gov. Marshall then moved to adjourn, and Col. Benton, who had just sprung to his feet, insisted that he had the floor. As a Hennepin county delegate he said he had a serious duty to perform. He entered a protest against the proceedings of the convention, alleging that it was not a regular nor a legitimate nomination. It had not been made by a majority of all the delegates entitled to seats. The convention, then adjourned without having appointed a congressional committee or adopted a platform.

Wisconsin State Democratic Convention.

The Wisconsin democratic convention to propose delegates to the Chicago Presidential Convention and to nominate Presidential electors was held at Madison on the 28th.

Following is a full list of the delegates chosen: At Large—William F. Vilas of Madison, James G. Jenkins of Milwaukee, E. S. Bragg of Fond du Lac, J. M. Morrow of Sparta.

District Delegates—First, James R. Doolittle of Racine, Aaron Rogers of Rock; Second, A. K. Delaney of Dodge, Barney S. Potter of Washington; Third, D. S. Ross of Lafayette, R. M. Rashford of Dane; Fourth, John Black and Charles F. Follman of Milwaukee; Fifth, A. L. Gray of Brown, Carl Ziellier of Sheboygan; Sixth, G. W. Pratt of Winnebago, George Kreiss of Outagamie; Seventh, J. W Lusk of Sauk, J. L. R. McCullum, of Richland; Eighth, W. H. Smith of Dunn, G. B. Freeman of Trempeleau; Ninth, Alexander Brazeau of Oconto L. Marchitte of Marathon.

Electors at Large—John Lawler of Prairie du Chien, Matt Armstat of Eau Claire.

District Electors—First, M. L. Ayers, Walworth; Second, Leonard Martin, Waukesha; Third, Nelson Dewey, Grant; Fourth, George A. Albert, Milwaukee; Fifth, Theodore Keister, Calumet; Sixth, F. G. Stroud, Columbia; Seventh, S. N. Dickenson, Monroe; Eighth, J. W. Hancock, Pierce; Ninth, J. H. Woodworth, Waupaca.

The principal feature of the platform is a denunciation of the present tariff as a masterpiece of injustice, inequality and false pretense, which yields a dwindling, and not a yearly rising revenue, has impoverished many industries to subsidize.

Minnesota State Democratic Convention.

The Democratic Convention of Minnesota to choose delegates to Chicago and to nominate presidential electors, was held at St. Paul on the 29th. Col. L. L. Baxter of Fergus Falls was president and J. D. Wood of the same place, secretary.

Nominations were then made for delegates at large, C. D. O'Brien of St. Paul nominated P. H. Kelly of Ramsey; O. H. Heffron, R. A. Jones of Olmsted; Joseph Casper, C. F. McDonald of Stearns. Each of these nominations was acted upon at once, and the gentlemen named declared elected. A formal ballot was called for between Michael Doran, R. L. Frazer and E. M. Wilson. Doran was elected by a large majority. All the delegates made short speeches in response.

After the several meetings of District delegates had been held the convention came to order and the following gentlemen were named, the reports being adopted without dissent:

District Delegates: First—W. J. Whipple of Winona, B. S. Cook of Steele. Second—Henry Poehler of Sibley, J. C. Wise of Blue Earth. Third—W. M. Campbell of Meeker, George N. Baxter of Rice. Fourth—Robert A. Smith of Ramsey, E. W. Durant of Washington. Fifth—Thomas E. Heenan of Stevens, A. E Guernon of Morrison.

Alternates: First District—John Frank of Mower, S. M. Emery of Wabasha. Second—C. McKenna of Waseca, John F. Meagher of Blue Earth. Third—John M. Spicer, of Kandiyohi, Hiram A. Parks of Goodhue. Fourth William Quin of Wright, A. D. Perkins of Pine. Fifth—Lafayette Emmet of Big Stone, P. M. Graff of St. Louis.

District Electors: First District—August Peterson of Freeborn. Second—Thomas E. Bowen of Brown. Third—F. E. Du Toit of Carver. Fourth—David Crawford of Wright. Fifth—E. M. Wright of Otter Tail.

Electors at large—John F. Norrish of Dakota and C. H. Liencan of Ramsey.

On motion of Ansel Oppenheim, the chair was authorized to appoint a state central committee of fifteen—three at large and one from each judicial district.

The following platforms was unanimously adopted: The Democrats of Minnesota, in convention assembled, declare that the existing depression of the business and industrial interests of the country demands—

First—That public affairs should be administered with the most rigid economy; that useless offices should be abolished, superfluous officials discharged, extravagant salaries reduced, and no appropriations made except those called for by the necessities of the people, and for the legitimate expenses of government.

Second—That a large surplus in the treasury is an ever-existing incentive to wasteful extravagance and official corruption; that it should be reduced, not by reckless appropriations, but by a reduction of the taxes which create it; that this reduction of taxation should be made upon its luxuries.

Third—In 1876 Mr. Tilden was nominated and elected upon the following platform:

"Resolved, That the present tariff is a masterpiece of injustice, inequality and false pretence. It has impoverished many industries to subsidize a few. It prohibits imports that might purchase the products of American commerce from the first to an inferior rank on the high seas. It has cut down the sales of American manufactures at home and abroad, and depleted the returns of American agriculture—an industry followed by half our people. It costs the people five times more than it produces to the treasury, obstructs the process of production and wasted the fruits of labor. It promotes fraud, fosters smuggling, enriches dishonest officials, and bankrupts honest merchants. We demand that all custom house taxation shall be only for a revenue."

"Resolved, that the defenders of the government in the late war for the Union are entitled to receive liberal pensions as a tribute to their patriotism, devotion and courage in the nation's trial."

WHAT THE GRANT'S SAY.

Interview Showing the Causes of the Sad Failure.

"What is your opinion of Mr. James D. Fish's statement regarding letters which passed between the general and himself relating to 'government contracts!'" asked a reporter of Col. Fred Grant.

"I never heard of such letters before I saw Mr. Fish's statement."

"Has the general?"

"As to that I cannot say. I know one thing, however, and that is that father is almost broken down by the assertions made by Mr. Fish. This has come upon him like a thunderclap, and it finds him as much unprepared as when the crash came. He was so stunned by the statement printed that it has almost brought him to his bed again."

"Is it not true then that the general was interested in Ward's colossal government contracts and derived a colossal income from profits thus obtained!"

"No, sir; that is, father assures me that he was never so interested."

"No, sir," chimed in Jesse as he knocked the ashes from a fragrant Havana and twirled a nifty bamboo. "I guess the reputation of my father for veracity will bear an exceedingly favorable comparison with that of Mr. Fish among all right-minded and unprejudiced people. When he says that he was not interested in this government contract business,' I say he wasn't. His word is all I want, and I think it enough to satisfy all. You remember, as it has already been said, that when father ascertained that Ward had been trading on his name in his alleged 'government contracts,' he became exceedingly enraged and threatened to have nothing further to do with him. Ward assured him that it was all a mistake, and father, I suppose, took his word for it."

"Why is it that the general seems so unwilling to make a statement as to his side of the case?" asked the reporter of the colonel.

"Simply because he is not anxious to rush into print until he knows where he stands. When Ward and Fish and the rest of them have tired themselves with making affidavits and statements for the newspapers then possibly father may be induced to fire a boradside. I am confident that the public believes generally that father is innocent of all wrong, in this matter, and that he would not permit his name to be used to secure business for a firm of which he is a partner from this 'government.'"

A PROBABLE EXPLANATION.

An intimate friend of the Grant family said that he had just spoken with Col. Fred Grant. He had in confidence informed him that the few dollars in his pocket was all he possessed in the world.

"As to those photographed letters about which there has been so much talk, I cannot quite understand. The only solution I can see to the problem is that some time ago the general's correspondence assumed such large proportions that he was compelled to employ a young fellow as a private secretary. When invitations to soldiers' reunions, balls, etc., etc., were showered upon him he would simply tell the secretary to mark upon the envelope two or three words of acceptance, or more frequently regret, and leave the rest to his scribe's judgment. Trusting everything connected with his business to his sons, Ward or Fish, he came to think that he must leave everything to their judgment. Therefore when letters were addressed to him by either of the latter, he simply ordered his clerk to reply to them, giving in substance only what he wished to say. The scribe would enlarge upon what he said at will, and an entirely different impression of what he had really said could be conveyed by the letter when posted. Then, too, the general being so confiding a man, could be induced by such a keen trickster as Ward to put his name to documents of the true import of which he had but little idea. I blame both the general and his sons severely for the carelessness they displayed in leaving everything to these two men—Ward and Fish. As to where these autograph or photographic letters are I am unable to say. I never knew of their existence until recently."

Gen. Butler the First Candidate in the Field.

The National Greenback Convention was held at Indianapolis on the 28th and 29th. All of the states were represented except Delaware and Mississippi. South Carolina was represented by Massachusetts proxy.

During the day the following telegram passed between Gov. Begole of Mich., and Gen. Butler, Indianapolis, May 28, to Gov. B. F. Butler, of Boston: Will you accept a nomination on a satisfactory platform? No other question here.

[Signed]. J. W. BEGOLE.

Boston, May 28, to Gov. J. W. Begole, Indianapolis: Thanks for your consideration, but why would I be asked a question, which under like circumstances, was never put any other man? Is not my record as a greenbacker for twenty years sufficient without a formal pledge to you which would cause me to be pointed at as a man to bid for a nomination?

[Signed] BENJ. F. BUTLER.

The permant president was Gen. James B. Weanor of Iowa with the usual number of officers. The majority report on platform was read by Mr. Norton, chairman of the committee. It contained a lengthy preamble setting forth the object of the Greenback party. It upholds the late decisions of the Supreme Court and demands plenty of legal tenders, the substitution of greenbacks for national bank notes and the prompt payment of the public debt. The retirement of fractional currency and small denominations of greenbacks, and demand their restoration. The issue of the hoards of money now locked up in the United States treasury by applying them to the payment of the public debt now due.

The convention proceeded to select candidates for president and vice president. The roll of states was called, and C. E. Cunningham of Arkansas nominated Gen. B. F. Butler, which was seconded by Chase of California, and by representatives of other states until Georgia was reached when Craver of that state nominated Jessie Harper of Illinois. Jones of New York nominated E. P. Allis of Wisconsin, and Atwood of Pennsylvania nominated T. B. Armstrong of that state. The ballot resulted:

Butler	323
Allis	8
Harper	08
Davis	1

Butler was declared the nominee. The convention then proceeded to the selection of a candidate for vice president, and Gen A. M. West of Mississippi was nominated by acclamation. It would be superfluous to give a biography of Gen. Butler as everybody knows all about him. But little is known of A. M. West, the candidate for vice president, further than that he is generally regarded as an available man for the ticket. He was originally an old line Whig, but afterward was identified with the Democracy for many years. He was a general in the confederate army through the war. Six years ago he identified himself with the Greenbackers, and in 1880 was the fusion candidate for governor.

At Columbus, Ohio, the court of inquiry investigating the conduct of Col. F. D. Mott of Dayton and other officers of the Fourth regiment during the riot at Cincinnati reported to the adjutant general of the state. It believes the officers guilty of offenses as follows: Col. F. D. Mott, incompetency and disobedience of orders; Lieut. Col. George H. Phillips, leaving his command without orders; Adjt. William B. Anderson, absence without leave and disobedience of orders; Capt. W. H. Wooster, desertion and disobedience of orders; Lieut. W. H. Buckles, absence without leave; Lieut. Charles W. Walters, Company B. desertion. The report recommends the disbanding of the Fourth regiment, and that the officers against whom there are no charges be taken as the nucleus of a new one.

At Milwaukee, the estate of Tully H. Smith, who suicided in New Orleans last week, where he had wandered while temorarily crazy, was probated Wendesday and was apprised at $125,000. The estate of S. P. Burt, who dropped dead immediately after returning from his bridal tour, was also probated. It amounts to several hundred thousand dollars. Burt's widow, formerly his domestic, will get one-third.

Contractor Richards, of the firm of Dorby & Richards, who have the contract for building the Northern Pacific extension from Superior City east to Ashland, expects orders daily from headquarters to employ a large force of men and rush the work to completion as soon as possible. At present they have about 100 men between Ashland and Superior.

Kate Colton, a colored girl, was convicted of murder in the second degree at Cairo, Ohio, and sentenced to imprisonment for life. She poisoned a whole family last September, and one person died from the effects.

Dolly White.

Just after the stroke of noon Saturday a Chelsea and Boston car was going up Broadway past a large manufacturing establishment, when the attention of the passengers was called to a queer little woman in an old-fashioned poke bonnet, who hurried down the street with a tin pail in her hand and went to the factory gate and knocked for admittance. An old gentleman who sat in the forward right-hand corner of the car looked up and said:

"Hello! there goes Dolly again."

"Dolly who?" asked a girl who sat at his side.

"Why, Dolly White. 'Crazy Dolly' as she is called by all who know her."

"What makes them call her crazy?" queried the girl, puckering up her pretty little mouth until it looked like a period under her hooked interrogation point of a nose.

"Oh, it was a long time ago, when she and Charlie hadn't been married but a few years and she used to come down here every noon and bring him his dinner, that the story commences. They lived in a house on Washington avenue and had two little children to take care of and they were just as happy as they could be, for Charlie was making a good living and had the promise of a boss-ship in the fall. Well, one day at noon she came in with his lunch, as was her custom, and just as she got to the gate it flew open and out came four men bearing the dead body of her husband, who had just been killed by a falling timber. Dolly fainted away at the sight and fell into a fever that did not abate until long after poor Charlie had been buried and another man hired to take his place in the factory. As soon as she got able to go out she went to work and scoured up the old dinner pail and put up a meal for her dead husband just the same as though he was alive and working as usual. At 15 minutes before 12 she put on her bright new shawl and gay bonnet, and, taking the pail in her hand tripped off down the street and knocked at the gate. The men came out and she told them that she wanted to go in and wait for Charlie and let him have something to eat. They tried to reason with her and told her that he had gone away on a long job, and wouldn't require any dinner for many a day—never, perhaps. But she would not listen to them, and waited there until the bell rang for the men to go to work again. Ever since then, and that was nearly ten years ago, she has done the same thing every day that the factory has been running.

Sundays, holidays, and in vacation time she stays at home, but all the rest of the time she puts on the same old shawl and bonnet—they are faded and threadbare now—and starts down the street with a tin pale in her hand."

"Does she carry the same old dinner or is it fresh every day?" asked the girl.

"It is fresh and hot every day."

"But what does she do with the old one when she finds that Charlie don't come out to eat it?"

"Well, she takes it home and sets it down on the table, and going into her chamber to take off her shawl and bonnet, she stays there and cries and cries. Before she comes out her two children steal into the room and eat the dinner all up and leave nothing but the empty pail. They are hearty children, their mother is poor, and a good hot dinner isn't bad for anybody; so they eat it and asked no questions."

"Oh!" said the girl, relapsing into silence and losing all interest in the story—Boston Globe.

Trinkets For the Arctics.

Washington Letter: In secret girls toiled over knit comforters for the dandy officers, and wristlets and other solaces of an Arctic climate, and the heroes were as well supplied with slippers and fancy work trifles as a young minister.

The ships are provisioned with no end of substantials by the government, and in addition each mess has laid in an abundance of the luxuries of life and candle ends and blubber will form no part of their diet while the ships are above water. A famous restauranteur has cooked and canned the most unusual supply of terrapin, and Chamberlain's feat of sending eight buckets of terrapin stew to San Francisco is distanced by this introduction of the diamond back to the Artic circle. Housekeepers will be glad to know that the terrapin is stewed with all the spices and wine that regularly accompanies it, then sealed hermetically and kept on ice until ready for use. When these ships reach the icy seas the cook will chop out the frozen terrapin, warm it up, add a little more sherry and make those waifs believe for the moment that they are back in their dear club-houses again. For this reason many people regard the whole relief expedition as a pleasant summer picnic for the carpet knights, who will be kept by cold weather and ready again to lead the german.

An Old Sailor's Superstition.

From the New York Times.

An accident which occurred a few years ago on an American vessel which was nearing port after an extended voyage around Cape Horn, illustrates the superstitions that are held by sailors. Among the crew of the vessel was an old sailor who was noted for his meanness, and who had openly expressed a desire that the voyage might be prolonged in order that he could have more wages when the port was reached: The other seamen were satisfied with the amount due them and were anxious to get into port as soon as possible. One evening, during the dog watch, the penurious sailor went to the forecastle head and began to whistle. He then beckoned to the various points of the compass ahead, as if to charm up a head wind. While the old sailor was occupied with his incantations he was observed by one of the ship's boys, who immediately rushed into the forecastle and informed the men that "Patsey" was on the forecastle head engaged in diabolical attempt to charm up a head wind. Intense indignation took possession of them. Curses were heaped upon his head, and some of the bolder ones proposed throwing the objectionable wizard overboard. He had committed a sin which his shipmates could not forgive. And yet the same men had a short time previously expressed themselves as firmly of the belief that whistling or any other action on the part of mortal could have no effect whatever on the wind.

GREAT RAILROAD SHOW.

Sells Brothers, the Buckeye Boys, Who have Demonstrated Success, Coming with a Fifty-Cage Menagerie and Grand Quadruple. Circus.

Fargo Argus.

According to the report of the advance agent, the genial and somewhat accomplished M. J. O'Neill, who arrived yesterday in company with Mr. Peter Sells, jr,, in his private car, and whose myrmidons are now busily engaged in painting red the whole city, there is no "great four ring circus" like Sells Brothers in all the whole world beside.

Native modesty prevents Mr. O'Neill from admitting more himself, and so he has kindly left with The Argus a few slips clipped from the leading papers of Chicago, a place down at the foot of Lake Michigan.

Any one can readily see from the cognomen of the companionable advance agent, that his fine Itialian hand would naturally evidence its work in writing of the simple wonders of this vast aggregation of consolidated wonder of towering and overpowering greatness, so to speak. The proprietors of this show admit themselves that over two hundred stars, "not mentioned in the bills," are a part of the attractions, besides the "scores of dens of wild animals" too numerous to mention and horrible to relate. They have secular as well as sacred elephants, hosts of camels, droves of kangaroos and the usual number of side shows, not down in the bills. Every man connected with the show from the oily advance agent to the myrmidom who lies low in the rear of the tent to prevent the surreptitious advent of the urchin who seeks to crawl in under the canvas, is a perfect gentleman, mostly from Ohio, and belongs to Mrs. Hayes temperance society.

Reams of paper might be spoiled in working up the wonders of this mastodon nondescript, three horned, four ringed circus and menagerie, but all the boys know Sells, and it is only necessary to say, "he is coming Father Abraham 600,000 more."

Chicago Tribune.

The Zoological collection is one of rare interest. The two hippopotami, which are far more docile than the corn-fed pig which pursues his devious way from the stock-yards to the immolation on the altar of commerce, are magnificent specimens, whether in the ring, into which they are introduced by their keeper, or in their tank, in which they disport with as much negligence as in the muddy water of the Nile. The two woolly elephants, which are multum in parvo so far as name and species are concerned, proved to be the irresistible "mashers" of the collection. They were, by all odds the pets of the women and children.

The delicate giraffe, with a yard of throat subject to diphtheria and with decidedly weak lungs, was also an object of attention on the part of many visitors, who admired his graceful pose and agility of movement. The three-horned rhinoceros, with his Shakspearean brow, pig eyes and forbidding jaws, also proved an attraction, and the vast majority of those who watched him munching his fodder wondered if he were really as fierce an animal as is usually represented on the thrilling poster.

Chicago Daily Inter-Ocean, May 17, 1884.

It was "Sells Brothers' Confederation of Stupendous Railroad Shows." After seeing the show it is but necessary to say that it is a good one and well deserving the patronage it received yesterday. The canvas covers seats for between 8,000 and 9,000 people, and yesterday afternoon there was a full attendance.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication May 1st, 1884.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of eighteen and 5-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Nicholas Backer and Elizabeth Backer, his wife to The New England Mortgage Security Company, bearing date the 18th day of January A. D. 1882, which mortgage was given to secure the payment of a note of $250, of even date with said mortgage, and interest on the said note at 7 per cent, according to the terms thereof, and the coupons thereto attached, and which mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 19th day of January A. Fred Anderson is rejoicing over the posession of a fine bull pup, sent to him from Chicago.

H. B. Montgomery of St Paul arrived in the city last Friday. He has considerable real estate in this city.

Dan Kelley was in from the Thirteen Towns last Friday. He gives a favorable report of things in that locality.

The Commercial House was crowded with traveling men last Saturday who came to Crookston to spend Sunday.

Judge Kelso of Bellevue, Iowa arrived in the city last Friday. The Judge is extensively engaged in farming in this country.

W. H. Topping ye genial host of the Commercial House returned last Friday. He has been in Ill's for the past ten days visiting his mother who has been quite ill but we are glad to note that she is improving rapidly. Top. says that there is nearly a hundred people in Chicago attending the Republican convention.

I. M. Underhill has sold out his business interest here to George Benham, his former partner who will carry on the business just the same as before. Mr. Underhill's reason for leaving is that his father is getting quite old and has a large business in the East, and has written for his son to come to him, and take charge of his business. We are very sorry to lose Mr. Underhill from our business circle. He has made many friends in this country and was doing a fine business in the law, real estate and insurance. He tells us that he may perhaps return in the fall.

One of our teachers in the public school told her scholars the other afternoon that they might go to the black board, and each of them draw some kind of a picture. So they went and some of them drew houses, some pictures of animals. One little boy drew a large elephant when it was finished he wrote the name, he called it Sampson. Another little boy standing beside him had been watching him very intently, and when the first boy finished the second boy started to work. He also drew an elephant but much smaller than Sampson. When he finished the teacher looked around and found that he had named his elephant Sampson's Addition.

SELLS' SHOW.

Large Audiences at the Performances Yesterday.

The march of civilization and the spirit of the times has evolved from the sawdust ring of fifty years ago an institution that is essentially American, the circus, which is to-day largely purified of its objectionable elements. Half a century ago the circus consisted of a blatant brass band, half a dozen cages of animals, a few red wagons, execrable performers and a miserable performance. In that day and generation it filled with delight and joy the heart of the populace, and the advent of the circus was as eagerly anticipated as it is at the present time. To-day the show business has been vastly amplified in size and in the diversity of its interesting and instructive features. Burlington is distinctively a circus patronizing town, as the generous patronage bestowed upon Sells Bros.' show, which gave two performances here yesterday, abundantly testifies. As this is a season when the disciples of Agricola are busily engaged in tilling the soil the agricultural element was not as largely represented as is usually observed at amusement enterprises of this character. But notwithstanding that this is a season when the farmers' attention would be wholly engrossed in preparing for the harvest, a sufficient number [illegible] to make their presence in the city noticeable [illegible] even the casual observer. City people attended in masse in the afternoon, though the superabundance of the aqueous element in the evening restrained many from venturing out, even to attend a circus, while it would have been a delight for them to have been present. The mammoth tents were pitched at the terminus of the West Hill Street car line, and when the opening hour arrived there was an immense throng surrounding the entrance clamoring for admission.

THE PERFORMANCE.

Sells Brothers stand high in the estimation of the amusement public and bear the enviable reputation of fulfilling every promise and exhibiting every curiosity advertised, and example worthy of emulation by all circus managers, some of whom do not deign to defraud the public by the grossest impositions. During the past few years the Sells Brothers have enlarged their show to magnificent proportions, introducing every point of excellence that a long managerial experience could suggest, untill it has come to be recognized by a discriminating public as a standard exhibition meriting a generous patronage.

Several thousand people assembled within the pavilion yesterday afternoon, who were unanimous in their expressions of a complimentary nature. As usual, the initial feature was the "grand entree," followed with a comic song, and chorus, by Ed. Neary. Professor White's performing dogs astonished the audience by their exhibition, and their seeming intelligence and comprehension of the commands of their master. The Remali and Leslie Bros in their brother acts, gained the applause of the assemblage. The head-balancing feat of the latter requires special reference, as it has not been witnessed here previously. Frank Gardner, the noted rider, gave a daring exhibition of his proficiency as an equestrian, and was followed by the Purvis sisters in a slack wire and globe act that gave evidence of dexterity and ability. Donaldson Brothers, the contortionists, gave pronounced satisfaction. Mlle. Adelaide Cordonna, an artistic equestrienne of national reputation, gave a thrilling exhibition of bareback riding, and also with James Stow performed a four-horse act that was excellent. Miss Maggie Claire, a handsome, vivacious lady with a pleasing face, who is an aerial artist of pronounced excellence, won applause in her trapeze performance. None the less meritorious was the bicycle riding of the Stirk family and the horizontal bar act of the Cordellas. James Robinson, who is considered the champion bare back rider and stands at the head of his profession and has been seen so frequently in Burlington, was greeted with enthusiasm. Among other features was the introduction of two educated donkeys and tumbling by the company, which includes Miss Pauline Lee, William Gorman and Dor Jeremiah Bell.

Space forbids further particularization, suffice to say the performance is of standard excellence throughout. The costumes and trappings are new and costly, the exhibition moves with celerity, contains nothing inimical to refinement and maintains the unflagging interest of the spectators. Several years ago The Hawkeye commended Sells Bros'. circus as one of unequalled merit, and is gratifying to note now that the highest standard of excellency has been reached.

MENAGERIE.

Two pavilions were filled with cages containing a large variety of wild animals from all parts of the globe, which affords a source of instruction that would not be derived from a lifetime study of zoology. In cage containing a tank filled with water is exhibited the rarest of wild beasts on exhibition, the hippotamus. There is a male and female, said to be the only pair in captivity. Further enumeration would be superfluous, suffice to say the menagerie is as complete as can be made and contains fifty cages.

The parade in the morning was of unusual length and was viewed by large crowds of people. The show left early this morning for Quincy.

Every body is talking now of the grand celebration to be held in this city on July the 4th and we would infer by what we have heard that there will be the finest parade ever gotten up this side of Minneapolis. We can't give the exact program as yet but there will be the parade, races, fireworks and a grand ball at the new Opera House in the evening. Come every body, bring your children, your cousins, uncles and your aunts and you never will regret having come to Crookston to celebrate the 4th of July.

White bed spreads at all prices, at the New York Store.

Children's day was observed at the Baptist Chapel on Sunday morning last in an appropriate and interesting manner. Recitations and singing was the order. School opened at 11 o'clock A. m. and lasted until 12.45 p. m. A committee of young ladies showed their taste in gathering flowers and decorating the Chapel. Mottoes worked upon card-board with appropriate verses on them, were hung upon the walls. The day was held by all Baptist Sabbath schools to aid in extending the Bible to schools which are not able to help themselves. Each class had a little basket and at the close of the school one scholar in each class was chosen to take up the collection. Mr. Wentworth showed [illegible]

Great preparations are being made here by our people for the celebration on St. Johns day.

We notice that the Grand Forks papers are commenting some upon the rural simplicity of the citizens of Crookston. While speaking of S. P. Norton signing a draft for $1000, we would ask what the cashier of the 1st National Bank has got to say for himself as he signed a draft for the same man on the same day, and for the same amount.

Mr. H. G. Palmer was in the city on Friday, en-route for Wahpeton, D. T., to look after the farmers' elevator business. He reports a lively interest in the project everywhere he roams. The company will at once commence the erection of elevators at different points and be ready to take a hand in the wheat buying business next fall. Let the good work go on.

As we go to press we learn that S. P. Norton received a telegram this morning from the Chief of Police in Winipeg to the effect that he had arrested and had in keeping a man that answered exactly to the description of Taylor. Mr. Norton accompanied by an officer left on the train for Winipeg this morning. It is to be hoped that he is the right man.

The finest line of cretonnes in the city, at the New York Store.

Commenting upon an entertainment given by the Alleghanians, a Sandwich Island newspaper man shoots off his mouth thusly: Ola ka Poe Mele a kani Belle—I ka poaono, hara 21 hana lakou ma ka hale kula Alii, samee Mel- [illegible] man, and so on till the end of the chapter. Well, after having heard them we don't wonder at the old Sandwich's frantic attempts to describe it. We felt that way ourself, but lacking the gift of gab are not prepared to warble it so glib. However, we appreciate the old duffer's situation, which his language shows to be indescribable.

At the New York Store can be found a full line of Grey Bros. fine shoes.

Mr. D. T. Herriott, a farmer living at Beltrami, has the true idea of farming in this country. While he indulges in No. 1 Hard extensively, he does not pin his faith to wheat alone. [illegible] he slaughtered two three year old graded shorthorn steers and sold them to the butcher man because [illegible]

Walker's logs are beginning to come down freely. The river above the upper wagon bridge is full of them.

The skating rink will be open for skaters in the afternoon from 2 o'clock to 5, and in the evening from 7.30 to 11 o'clock.

Marshal Dowling arrested a man this morning on the north bound train answering to the description of a very noted forger.

The Union depot at St. Paul was destroyed by fire on the night of June 10th. No lives lost. The building was fully insured in New York companies.

John McKinnon went up to St. Thomas, D. T., on Tuesday to see a J. I. Case thresher engine at work. It is a straw-burner and so constructed that it is not necessary to use wood to start fires, and by a simple arrangement of the cold water chest the crown sheet is so protected as to render burning it out impossible. He says there is much wheat around St. Thomas yet to be threshed.

The Alleghanians were invited to conduct the singing services at the Congregational church on Sabbath evening last. The house was crowded to its utmost capacity but whether it was the large audience or the singing that inspired the Rev. Mr. Page, we cannot say, but the fact remains that he delivered one of the most eloquent sermons ever listened to in this city. All seemed to appreciate the excellent music and the eloquent sermon.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Palmer are spending a few days in the city visiting friends. Mr. Palmer says that the lumber for the farmers' elevator at Angus is beginning to arrive and that the work of construction will soon begin. In this matter of shipping lumber and locating sites the railroad company are very liberal, having sent their own surveyor out to locate sites and shipped the lumber at greatly reduced rates.

A Very Smooth Confidence Man.

S. P. Norton, Proprietor of the Central House, Taken in for the Snug Little Sum of $1,000.

It seems about the 12th of May a man arrived in this city and registered at the Central house as Wm. Taylor, Elmira, N. Y. He was very gentlemanly in appearance and pleasing in conversation and of course Mr. Norton did everything in his power to make it pleasant for him as he remarked that he expected to be here some time, for the purpose of looking over the country and of locating here, providing he found a suitable place. He staid here a few days, paid his bill and went to Grand Forks, staid there a day or two, and then returned again. He then told Mr. Norton that he was thinking of purchasing a farm or two near Grand Forks, as his brother and brother-in-law had sold their farms in the east and wanted to come to this country, and that they wanted him to look the country over, and find some good land, they would send him the money to purchase the same with, he thought that he had found just what he wanted near Grand Forks. So everything went along nicely, he going to Grand Forks about once or twice a week, always paying his board promptly before he left, but staying most of the time with Mr. Norton at the Central House in this city, until June 3d, he received a letter from his brother or some of his relatives with a draft for $1,000. He then asked Mr. Norton if he would be kind enough to walk over to the bank and identify him, Mr. Norton of course went with him. They went to the First National bank, and Taylor presented the check to cashier Bates, who told him that he would have to get somebody to endorse it with him, Taylor turned round and asked Mr. Norton if he would sign it with him, and on the impulse of the moment he did so, Taylor drawing the money. They returned to the hotel and he (Taylor) then told Mr. Norton that he thought he should go over to Grand Forks and close the bargain for one of the farms that day, so he left on the train for Grand Forks the same morning. After he had gone, Mr. Norton began to think that signing a draft for a stranger, for that amount was rather a foolish thing to do, so he went to some of his friends here and asked their advice in the matter. They told him that he had better telegraph to Grand Forks and see about it. He did not do it, but let the day pass by without doing anything. The next morning he boarded the train and went over to see about it, but was one day too late, as the bird had flown. Tuesday evening Mayor Walsh received a letter from the cashier of the First National bank of Grand Forks, inquiring as to whether one Wm. Taylor had stopped at any of our hotels since June 3d, and also asking for an immediate reply. We would infer from the letter that Mr. Norton is not the only victim. There seems to be no doubt but what this so called Taylor is a professional and [illegible]

A DASTARDLY ACT.

Some miscreants entered the school house in the town of Crookston one night recently and tore up books, broke seats and other wise rendered the room temporarily unfit for occupancy. It is supposed to have been the work of low-lived animals large enough to have been men, and Mr. Cornelius informs us that the school officers have a clue which will doubtless lead to the arrest and punishment of the wretches. So mote it be.

Mr. August Walter returned from a short trip below on Wednesday evening. He has been to St. Paul to place his two-year old crippled boy under charge of Dr. Stumm. The doctor has got the little fellow's feet snugly encased in plaster of paris and thinks he can straighten them out all right.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of eighteen and 5-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Nicholas Backer and Elizabeth Backer, his wife to The New England Mortgage Security Company, bearing date the 18th day of January A. D. 1882, which mortgage was given to secure the payment of a note of $250, of even date with said mortgage, and interest on the said note at 7 per cent, according to the terms thereof, and the coupons thereto attached, and which mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 19th day of January A. D. 1882, at 8:30 o'clock a. m., in book "G" of mortgages, on pages 83, 84 and 85, and whereas, it was provided in and by the term of said mortgage, that in case default should be made in the payment of any of the interest on said note at the time the same should became due, the said interest should bear interest from said default, at 10 percent per annum, and further, that in case of such default the said mortgagee should have the power to declare the whole debt secured by said mortgage, due and payable and foreclose the said mortgage for the whole of the said debt, and default having been made in the payment of the interest coupon due January 1st, 1884, and the interest on said interest from said date, the said mortgagee elected that the whole sum secured by said mortgage should be at once due and payable according to the provisions of said note and the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof,

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, That by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statue in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The northeast quarter (ne¼) of Section twenty-two (22,) in Township one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range forty-six (46) west, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the whole of said debt secured by said mortgage and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 17th day of June A. CRAZY AT TIMES.

Every Person a Lunatic Now and Then.

Prof. David Swing.

The fact that a druggist of this city ended a human life by putting up wrong medicine awakens much indignation. He says many customers were in the store; he was in a hurry; he put up morphine instead of some similar drug. The inquiry arises whether the clerk is able to fill an order only when he has no customers in the shop? How empty must the shop be in order to secure safety? Must the street in front of the drug-store also be empty? What if a fire-engine goes by? What if a dog fight occurs while the druggist is reaching for quinine? Is he justified in taking down strychnia? What if his mother-in-law has come to visit him?

Such questions came up and properly; but there is another side to the fact of erring druggists, and that is, that most persons are crazy, part of the time. The exceptions are rare. Each one is now and then a fool of the most complete order and species. All the laws and penalties in the world will not avail to make a druggist or anybody else have his full senses through all his life. Crazy moments or seconds will come. A wise man will step backward off a porch or into a mud-puddle, a great philosopher will hunt for the specks that are in his hand or on his forehead, a hunter will sometimes shoot himself or his dog, a barber will sometimes forget his job and slice off a piece of a chin, or an ear or the nose. A girl at work at Marshal Field's, had been feeding a great clothing knife for ten years. Last week she watched the knife come down, slowly upon her hand. Too late she woke out of her stupor with one hand gone. For a few seconds her mind had failed, and she sat by her machine a temporary lunatic and had watched the knife approach her own hand.

The man recently murdered on North Clark street of Chicago saw the enemy come up with murder in his face, saw him draw a revolver, and, instead of making a lightning spring at the man, he stood bewildered and thus fell dead. His reason left him in the second of his greatest need.

One of the distinguished professors in one of our colleges was teaching near a canal. Walking along one evening in summer he walked as deliberately into the canal as he had been walking along the path a second before. He was brought to his senses by the water and mud and the absurdity of the situation. He had on a new suit of clothes and a new silk hat, but, though the damage was thus great, he still laughs over the adventure.

Our mail collectors find in the iron boxes along the streets all sorts of papers and articles which have been put in by some hand from whose motions the mind has become detached. A glove, a pair of spectacles, a deed, a mortgage, a theatre ticket goes in and on goes the person holding on to the regular letter which should have been deposited. This is called absent-mindedness, but that is a brief lunacy. A lunatic is a person whose mind is habitually out of balance.

The Smallest Locomotive.

Following are some points about the little locomotive built at Oil City, Pa., the smallest engine in the world, being but eight inches long and weighing but a pound and a half. Three years, counting ten hours a day's labor, have been devoted to its construction. There are 585 screws in the engine. The steam gauge is but one-quarter of an inch in diameter; the pump throws but one drop of water every stroke; the headlight is only one-half an inch in width, seven-eighths of an inch high, and three eighths of an inch long. The space in the lamp is so small that it was almost impossible to get enough oxygen in it to support the combustion. The fire kindled by using a gill of alcohol, which runs the engine for half an hour. The stroke of the cylinder is one inch; bore, 5-16; the throttle lever is but five eights of an inch long; the reverse lever is one inch long, arranged with a thumb latch and click; the fire-box is seven-eigths of an inch wide and one inch long; the smoke-stack 1¼ inches high and 5-16ths of an inch in diameter; the steam dome 9-16ths of an inch in diameter; the driving wheels are 1¼ inches in diameter; the front truck wheels half an inch, and those of the tender are the same size. The tender is but 3¼ inches long, 2¼ inches wide, and 2 inches high, the metals used in its construction are brass, solid silver, gold and steel.

Cooling Railway Cars.

The French railway authorities are at present engaged in a series of experiments, from which, perhaps, our own directors might take some hints. With hot weather coming on, or at least in the ordinary course of nature expected, the problem is how to keep the railway carriages cool. In France travelers are packed very tightly and most trains go very slowly, and the authorities have to arrange to deliver their human cargoes at distant termini with vitality not quite extinct. So they are now exercised in seeking how to cool their carriages. They have gone as far as India for suggestions, and the favorite experiment is with a kind of punkah. A long cylinder runs the length of the roof of the carriage, furnished with fans, set in motion by revolving the cylinder. After many systems tried, this seems the most practicable, and the only point to dispute is how to get the motion force. The surplus steam of the engine has been tried on one line, and on another a little arrangement like a wind mill attached to each carriage, the motion of the train causing the wings to revolve, while the occupants of each carriage can regulate or arrest the steam of air. Both systems are being tested.

Personal Paragraphs.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, will be fifty years old next month. His admirers, including many from this country, mean to celebrate the jubilee by giving him a present, and over $5,000 was subscribed at the start to open the list.

Mrs. Hammersley, the defendent in the great will case in New York, is described as "an extremely pretty woman, less than 26 years of of age, and the possessor of a fortune of $5,000,000. She was a Miss Price, of Troy, and her married life was very brief."

Mr. Patrick J. Sheridan, the Irish dynamite orator, and Mr. Patrick Ford, dynamite editor, have fallen out. Ford charges Sheridan with having spoken words which checked the flow of cash into the "emergency fund," and Sheridan charges Ford with applying the fund to his own private emergencies.

Mr. W. W. Corcoran, the millionaire banker and philanthropist of Washington, is said to be exceedingly proud of his ancestry. His glories in the fact that his father was only a poor, honest shoe-maker, and he treasures the old cobbler's-shop signboard among his choicest possessions. Mr. Corcoran's health is unusually good this spring.

Minnie Palmer, the actress, who is making a stir abroad, is a Philadelphia girl. Her father was a sailor. Her mother, who traveled with her, was a little stage-struck and got the girl into the notion. She always called her "Baby," even up to a year or so ago.

James B. Eustis, who has been elected Senator from Louisiana, is the son of a former Chief Justice of Louisiana and a graduate of Harvard. He is married and is wealthy. He carried the recent Democratic caucus of the Legislature by one vote. He was elected to the United Stated Senate in 1873 by one vote, and that was his own.

The big whale caught by the crew of the Lizzie P. Simmons, of New-London, at Cumberland Inlet, turns out to have been more valuable than was first supposed. Tuesday the exact returns of the sale in Scotland were reseived by C. A. Williams & Co., the owners of the Simmons, and are as follows; From whalebone. $12,230; oil, $3,490; total, $15.720. This is the largest amount ever realized from a single whale.

The Foundation of "Liberty."

The largest artificial stone in the world is the one just finished, and which is to form the foundation for Bartholdi's statue of Liberty on Bedloe's Island in New York harbor. The stone is made of broken trap rock, sand, American and foreign cement mixed and water. Twenty thousand barrels of cement were used. The mixture for the stone was emptied into the "jacket" or mold, and then the surplus water was squeezed out. The stone rapidly hardened, and will now bear 100 tons to the square foot. It is only expected to bear up five tons to the square foot, but it will grow harder for the next two years. It has the color and grain of coarse gray sandstone. It is sunk 15 feet below the floor of the fort and rises 37 feet above it, has a base of 91 feet square. is 67 feet square at the top, and is 52 feet and 10 inches high. On top of this will be erected the granite pedestal from which is to tower in all its magnificent proportions the collosal work of the great French sculptor. The casting of this mammoth monolith evidences the extent of modern progress in a signal way.

No Cause for Mourning.

A communication from Memphis announced the demise of Brother Buckalong Cribbs, he having met his fate by drowning while trying to swim half a mile on a bet of two bits. Giveadam Jones moved a resolution of sympathy for the bereaved widow and children. Samuel Shin moved that the sum of $20 be voted from the treasury to help pay the funeral expenses. The Rev. Penstock desired to move a resolution to the effect that in the midst of life we are in death. "Gem'len," said the president, as he waved them down, "we shall hang an emblem of mournin' on the doah-knob and let it go at dat. If any member of dis club am fule 'nuff to swim the Mississippi River in de month of May on a bet of two bits dat he doan' go to de bottom, his bereaved widow and chill'en am probably glad he's gone. We will now percolate homewards."—Lime Kiln Club.

Things in General.

Two of the three huge fortified places d'armes destined to constitute the front line, so to speak, of Germany's eastern frontier defences, are now virtually completed. Posen, like Kœnigsberg, has been engirdled by a number of powerful outlying forts, connected with one another and with the citadel by subterranean telegraphic wires. These works have just been finished and will soon be armed. By the end of the year Thorn will also be belted with forts, and, as a stronghold, will be entitled to rank with Posen, Kœnigsberg, Strasburg, and Metz. To the second line of eastern defences, the principal fortresses of which are Glogau and Kuestrin, it is intended to add Danzig, where dockyards and arsenals for the use of the German imperial navy are to be constructed, as well as a splendid fortified harbor. These works will be undertaken immediately upon the completion of the system of forts now in course of construction at Thorn, and of the landward defences of the great "war harbor" of Kiel.

Justice Marshall's Family.

Chief Justice Marshall's family represented in this generation by several persons living in Woodford county, Ky. Near the town of Washington, in that state, lives Charles A. Marshall, a nephew of the chief justice. Adjoining the town is the Marshall burial ground in which the tombstones tell of the McClungs as well. The mother of the noted duelist, Alexander McClung (uncle of J. W. McClung of St. Paul) was a sister of the Chief Justice, and one of her sons, who drowned himself at Niagara Falls, married a sister of General Albert Sidney Johnston. The latter, though famous as a southerner, was the son of a Connecticut Yankee, old Dr. John [illegible] who migrated to Kentucky [illegible] century.

MINNESOTA NEWS NOTES.

Minnesota Odd-Fellows.

The thirty-second annual convocation of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of Minnesota met in St. Paul with about 50 delegates in attendance. I. F. Clark of Pine Island, the grand master, presided over the meeting. The report of the grand master mentioned the change of place of this meeting from Moorhead to St. Paul, at the request of the lodge at Moorhead.

Reports from forty-five lodges conveyed the gratifying news that they were in a healthy and flourishing condition. The membership this year is placed at over 6,000. The state of finances show a degree of prosperity far in advance of the expectation of the most sanguine. The grand secretary and treasurer's report were to the effect that seven grand lodge cards had been issued during the year. Expenditures for all purposes during the past year have been $3,121,22, which is upward of $50 less than each of the preceding years.

The election of officers took place, with the following result:

N. S. Tefft, M. W. grand master, Plainview.

S. T. Jones, R. W. deputy grand master, Kasson.

P. Arnott, R. W. grand warden, Alexandria.

Sherwood Hough, R. W. grand secretary and treasurer, St. Paul.

Minnesota State Normal Schools.

The reports of the president of the schools showed the following enrollment: At Winona, total in school, 501; normal department 245, preparatory 78, model 178; graduates in 1884, 52; total graduates from school to date, 532. The enrollment in the normal classes during the past five years has increased from 120 to 245. There is great need of an increased appropriation. At St. Cloud the entire enrollment was 370; graduates, 23. The total amount of money received by this school turned over to the state from tuition, library and ladies' home was $2,898.51. The library has 3,865 volumes. There has been purchased $1,000 worth of new philosophical apparatus. The new ladies, home will be ready for occupation in the fall. At Mankato the total enrollment was 506, an increase of 200 per cent. in four years. The receipts from tuition were $1,705.50, an increase in one year of $700. Book rents amounted to $519.65. The need of an increased appropriation is urged.

Articles of incorporation of the Lake Superior Terminal and Transfer Railway company of Minnesota have been filed with the secretary of state. The company is to establish transfer lines between the different roads and docks in St. Louis county, to operate depots, storage tracks and yards, etc. Gen. Hammond, one of the incorporators, stated the object of the company was to furnish terminal facilities for all railroads building to the head of Lake Superior. The new organization, he says, has no connection with any of the old roads.

Capt. E. C. Babb, department commander, has received applications for charters for two additional posts of the G. A. Pillsbury. Rogers, Canfield and Newell voted for Norton for harmony's sake, and all the members express themselves as satisfied with the result. Mr. Norton is a partner in the lumber firm of Laire, Norton & Co., who have large mills at Winona and Hoyward, Wis. Escape of Carpenter from Yankton.

Yankton, Special. Edwin E. Carpenter of Beloit, Iowa, under indictment, with Cameron and Russell, in the United States court, for alleged conspiracy to defraud by issuing bogus land scrip, escaped from Deputy Marshall Early Wednesday morning at Elk Point. Carpenter was under $14,000 bail to appear at Yankton May 27, but he failed to show up. The marshals began looking for him, and he was arrested at his home by Deputy Callahan, who made the trip overland from Yankton at night. Callahan got as far toward Yankton as Elk Point, and having been up all night before, he intrusted Carpenter for safekeeping with another deputy at Elk Point. About 3 o'clock this morning Carpenter jumped out of the window and was soon over the line in Iowa. The marshals have no doubt that Carpenter will be found, though his escape will put the government to great expense, as a large number of witnesses are now at Yankton to testify, and the case will probably go over.

The Senatorial Orators.

Reporter Murphy, the veteran stenographer of the senate, says: "Webster was a very slow talker, and he would not average over 100 words a minute. Henry Clay spoke much faster, rolling out about 150 words to the minute. Calhoun was also slow until he became roused up with the enthusiasm of his subject, when his words would flow more rapidly. The present average of speaking in the United States senate is about 150 words per minute, though there are several speakers who utter over 200. Among the fastest speakers at present are Senators Beck, Hawley, Plumb and Morgan. Beck loads the list. Senator George of Mississippi is perhaps the slowest. Some of them are very careful about their revision, and others pay no attention to them after they are once spoken. Senator Edmunds never revises a speech, but some of the other senators look the manuscript carefully over before it goes to the press. One night I heard John Bell of Tennessee make a speech when the president of the senate, himself and I were the only ones in the chamber. It was a long night session and all the rest of the senators were loafing either in the cloak rooms or in the restaurant. Bell nevertheless roared out his speech with all the eloquence and earnestness of a revivalist preacher. The perspiration rolled down his face, he tore off his collar and preached away as though 50,000 people were listening to him. Yes, there have been many funny speeches here, but that was one of the funniest. One of the fastest speakers of the senate was Mr. Sargent, our late minister to Berlin. He could speak for two hours averaging 200 words a minute. There was a debate here some year ago on the District of Columbia bonds which lasted about four hours, and which by actual calculation averaged between 192 and 200 words a minute.

Tar Smoke for Diphtheria.

From the New York Times.

Ruth Lockwood, the 9-year old child of Thomas Lockwood, a compositor in the Times office, became violently ill with diphtheria on Tuesday night. She was so weak that it was deemed dangerous to try tracheotomy, or cutting open the windpipe. On Thursday Dr. Nichols of 117 West Washington place, who was attending her, received a copy of the Paris Figaro, which contained a report made to the French academy of medicine by Dr. Delthil; Dr. Delthil said that the vapors of liquid tar and turpentine would dissolve the fibrinous exudations which choke up the throat in croup and diphtheria.

Dr. Delthil's process was described. He pours equal parts of turpentine and liquid tar into a tin pan or cup and sets fire to the mixture. A dense resinous smoke arises, which obscures the air of the room.

"The patient," Dr. Delthil says, "immediately seems to experience relief, the choking and rattle stop; the patient falls into a slumber and seems to inhale the smoke with pleasure. The fibrinous membrane soon becomes detached and the patient coughs up microbicides. These, when caught in a glass, may be seen to dissolve in the smoke. In the course of three days afterwards the patient entirely recovers."

Dr. Nichols tried this treatment yesterday with little Ruth Lockwood. She was lying gasping for breath when he visited her. First pouring about two tablespoonfuls of liquified tar on an iron pan, he poured as much turpentine over it and set it on fire. The rich resinous smoke which rose to the ceiling was by no means unpleasant. As it filled the room the child's breathing became natural, and as the smoke grew dense she fell asleep.

Mr. W. Irving Bishop the American thought-reader, gave a remarkable exhibition in London, Tuesday of his peculiar power. A canon of Westminster cathedral consented to act as subject, and after Mr. Bishop had been securely blindfolded, wrote the name of an object within a radius of one mile upon a strip of paper, which he continued to hold in his hand. Mr. Bishop then put a wire around the canon's wrist, and dragged him out of the hall and through the streets in the presence of a jeering and yelling crowd, until he arrived in front of the designated object. There he stopped, and the canon proved, by exhibiting the paper that he fully accomplished his task.

John Stanton, a steamboat engineer, at St. Louis threw nearly a goblet full of sulphuric acid over his wife as she lay in bed, inflicting injuries which will kill her. Her eyes were eaten out, and she is terribly burned in the face, neck, breast and shoulders. On a previous occasion Stanton shot her twice and then attempted to kill himself. Jealousy was the cause.

Acquittal of Murder.

The trial of John G. Sterner for the murder of Anton Muschler of Perham was held in the district court at Fergus Falls, Otter Tail County, before Judge Collins. The jury was impaneled with great care. County Solicitor Corliss appeared for the state and Capt. M. E. Clapp for the defendant.

The prisoner's plea of defense was self-protection. Being put upon the witness stand himself, he testified that he had been told by at least five different parties that Mutchler had threatened to do him bodily injury, and he had armed himself accordingly; that he had entered Rush's saloon on the evening of Jan. 19 to collect some money from a party owing him. Mutchler followed him, and made a personal attack, when he drew the revolver. Mutchler then struck him, and grabbed his hand, when the weapon was discharged accidentally.

The Jury brought in a verdict of not guilty and the prisoner on being dismissed, took the train for Iowa. Sterner is a plasterer by trade, has no family, and is a brother-in-law of E. H. Love, editor of the Perham Bulleton. Mutchler left a wife and eight children.

The Palisade Mountain House, on Englewoop Cliffs, overlooking the Hudson, ten miles above New York city, was destroyed by fire at 2 o'clock Wednesday morning, the 4th. There were thirty-five persons in the house, including the proprietor, servants and watchmen. None of the occupants were guests, as the hotel was not to be opened for the season until Saturday next. About twenty women were asleep on the top floor, and ten men on the floor below. The women became panic-stricken, and as the great structure was filled with smoke, some of them barely escaped. The building was 600 feet long, seventy-five feet wide, and five stories high, with a wing fifty feet long and 100 feet deep. It cost $170,000 when built in 1871.

Mr. Labouchere reiterates in Truth his former prediction of the early resignation of Mr. James Russell Lowell as United States minister to England. In connection with this statement he alludes to the pleasant relations that have been maintained throughout Mr. Lowell's residency, not withstanding certain irritating incidents which might have imperiled the Anglo American entente, and expresses the belief that his retirement will be sincerely regretted by the English people.

An Old Time Cider Drinker.

One of the oldest men in Winthrop, Me., is Uncle Bragdon. He is about 70 years of age now, and his occupation from mill work to hoeing potatoes is, principally, drinking cider. The story of his bargin with the widow is probably the best of many told about him, because it is true: The widow in question had a great pile of wood in her dooryard, and Uncle Bragdon was hired to saw and split it. He soon began to ask for cider. and the widow, who had, like every one else in Winthrop, a cellar full, favored the old man's whim until he had emptied a keg or two, and then, by agreement, she began to charge a small price per gallon. The wood sawing went on, with a drink of cider between every two sticks, and the widow kept tally. When the job was done the widow and Uncle Bragdon figured up, and for a fact he had drank so much cider that he owed the widow $3.50.

SKIN HUMOR

My baby six months old broke out with some kind of skin humor, and after being treated five months by my family physician, was given up to die. The druggist recommended Swift's Specific, and the effect was as gratifying as it was miraculous. My child soon got well, all traces of the disease is gone, and he is as fat as a pig.
J. J. Kirkland,
Minden, Rusk County, Texas.

I have suffered for many years from ulcers on my legs. Often very large and painful, during which time I used almost everything to effect a cure, but in vain. I took Swift's Specific by advice of a friend, and in a short time was cured sound and well.
Edwin J. Miller, Beaumont, Texas.

I have been afflicted with Scrofula for twelve years and have had sores on me as large as a man's hand for that length of time. Last summer I was so bad off that I could not wear clothing. I had spent hundreds of dollars in the effort to be cured, but all to no purpose, and had injured myself with Mercury and Potash. Your Swift's Specific cured me promptly and permanently, and I hope every like sufferer will take it.

Catalogue of Trees and Plants suited to this climate.

How to Plant and Care for them.

I come before my patrons and others with a new Catalogue for the year 1884 with an experience of five years in this northern climate growing Nursery Stock and Small Fruits. I feel with confidence to recommend to the public most of the trees, shrubs and plants presented in this Catalogue, providing they have proper care in planting and cultivation.

PLANTING AND CULTURE.

If soil is not dry, it is best to make it so by proper drainage before planting. Deep and thorough plowing into ridges so as to plant on top of back-furrow, leaving dead furrow for surface drainage, is good. Well rotted manure spread on land where it is new, and plowed under, will help to pulverize and take out the wild grass nature from the soil.

HOW TO PREPARE TREES.

First, cut all [illegible] roots, in fact all large roots, an inch or an inch and one-half from the ends, with a [illegible] cut from under side. Cut all side branches back nearly one-half; also leader part way, thus giving more sap to start roots instead of supporting such a large top at first. Do not expose the roots to the sun or drying winds. Keep them always covered or moist until planted, oftentimes success or failure depends upon this little care given at time of planting.

PLANTING.—On ground thoroughly plowed, holes just large enough to receive the roots of the trees straightened out nicely, will do. But if not plowed, holes dug from 1½ to 2 feet in diameter and just deep enough to set tree from one to two inches lower than it stood in in the Nursery, will be sufficient. Spread roots out carefully, sift fine dirt around them, add a pail of water, raise up tree a little so that the mud will stick to the roots; let water soak away in the earth, then fill up hole with soil around tree and pack it firmly with the feet. Be sure and stake trees, with matting between, to prevent chafing. It will protect the small roots from breaking during heavy winds. Protect trees on south side from sun scald with a handful of straw or hay, loosely tied along body of tree, or even two pieces of board nailed together and sharpened at one end and driven in ground a foot or so from body of tree will be a safeguard from sunscald.

All cultivation should stop in July so that trees will more thoroughly ripen their wood before winter. Prune back one-half year's growth of branches in the last two weeks of August, which will help to harden the wood, dwarf the tree and make it stand the winter better. Trees should be dwarfed as much as possible, in this climate.

All trees and plants should be thoroughly cultivated while young; they become more thrifty and will yield much better and larger fruit. Young orchards can be seeded down after the fourth or fifth year from planting. Plant trees from twelve to sixteen feet apart each way.

APPLES.

The hardiest varieties and those that have succeeded best in Minnesota, are, first:

DUTCHESS OF OLDENBURG.—Large and beautiful apple, striped with deep red background, tender and juicy. Season September. This apple is of Russian origin and has stood the severities of Minnesota winters as far north, and even farther, than Minneapolis.

WEALTHY APPLE.—Originated in Minnesota from seed brought from Maine. It is nearly as hardy as the Dutchess of Oldenburg. A color deep red, very juicy, good bearer. Season November to January. There are several other kinds quite hardy, but none I can feel to recommend, and [illegible] Dutchess and Wealthy are not sure in Northern Minnesota and Dakota.

IMPROVED SIBERIAN APPLES.—I have taken much pains to examine and grow [illegible] kinds. They are much safer to plant in this climate than standard apple trees, but none have succeeded very well but Trancendent and Hislop. These have been bearing in the Nursery for the past two years.

TRANSCENDENT CRAB.—This is one of the very best for the climate. Large and beautiful yellow, shaded with bright red, crisp and juicy, excellent in flavor. Season September and October.

HISLOP CRAB.—Large, deep crimson; excellent for preserving and drying. Ripens some later than Transcendent; will keep nearly all winter.

The last two varieties have been thoroughly tested in Northern Minnesota and in Manitoba, and have proved quite successful.

PLUMS.

Of these I cannot recommend but one variety, DESOTO, which will do well in favored localities.

GRAPES.

The hardiest are the CLINTON and JANESVILLE. They will grow good fruit and mature if frosts do not come too early in September.

SMALL FRUITS.

These are much safer and more satisfactory to plant in this climate than fruit trees. They will bear an abundance of fruit with proper care in planting and cultivation. First on the list are

CURRANTS.

There is no need of excluding varieties; all are hardy and prolific in this northern climate. Small bushes set in my Nursery, only two years old, were loaded down with fruit the following year.

BLACK NAPLES.—Similar to the old Black English, but larger, and more productive, and every way better.

CHERRY.—Largest of red currants, Bush short, vigorous and productive.

PRINCE ALBERT.—A new and beautiful robust plant, very stocky and even in size. Somewhat later in fruit than cherry currant; a valuable red variety.

VICTORIA CURRANT.—A stocky large, plant, vigorous in growth and one of the best red varieties.

RED DUTCH. IMPROVED.—This is the earliest red variety, very prolific in fruit of medium size.

WHITE GRAPE CURRANT.—This is the best white currant grown. Large, mild, and when fully ripe almost sweet; best for table use; an immense bearer.

I have a large stock of all of the above varieties in Nursery. All kinds have fruited and stood through our severest winters. Plant them in good soil four feet each way. Give thorough cultivation and you will have an abundance of fruit in a short time.

GOOSEBERRIES.

This fruit is good and quite certain of success. The best are

HOUGHTON SEEDLING AND DOWNING.—Plant them four feet each way in good rich soil.

RASPBERRIES.

This variety of fruit is always satisfactory, but needs some protection from our severe winters.

PHILADELPHIA.—Medium size, dark red, hardy and an immense bearer.

MAMMOTH CLUSTER.—The best hardy black variety. Plant them four feet apart in rows, but rows should be six feet apart so as to have plenty of room for new canes.

STRAWBERRIES.

These are among our best small fruits. I have grown them in Nursery the past five years, yielding large fine fruit and of the best quality. They should be planted on good soil thoroughly prepared, in rows four feet apart, and twenty inches apart, in the row. The best varieties are, first,

WILSON'S ALBANY.—An old tried variety very productive and large, succeeds well on all soils.

CRESCENT SEEDLING.—One of the best new varieties, very vigorous and hardy rich, fine flavor and heavy bearer when fertilized with the Wilson.

SHARPLESS SEEDLING.—A large new variety, pleasant flavor, but not as heavy a bearer as the Wilson and Crescent.

ESCULENT ROOTS.

ASPARAGUS.—Does well. I have fine two year old roots for sale.

RHUBARB.—There is nothing grown that pays better for the same labor expended than pie plant. Once thoroughly set in trenches, one foot deep, and one foot wide, first putting in bottom of trench well rotted manure, two inches in depth, fill trench up with good dirt, set roots in this four feet apart. I furnish roots two years old, sufficient in size to give stalks to use the first season, of the following kinds I have Strawberry, Linneaus, Victoria and Mammoth.

ORNAMENTAL TREES SHRUBS AND PLANTS.

ASHLEAF MAPLE.—A rapid spreading tree, has a beautiful light green foliage; the best for street planting.

ELM, AMERICAN WHITE.—Abundant in our forests; nice for streets and lawns.

SOFT MAPLE.—Good shade trees, quite hardy after fourth year.

EUROPEAN MOUNTAIN ASH.—A hardy, small-sized tree, beautiful in bloom, covered with great clusters of scarlet berries from July until winter.

WEEPING ASH.—A beautiful, hardy, drooping tree, nice for lawns.

TREE CLAIM STOCK.

I make it a specialty to grow young, thrifty trees from Ash and Box Elder seeds, one and two years old, to sell by the thousand for Tree Claims, also furnish Cottonwood and Soft Maple trees, White Willow Cuttings for windbreaks and Ash and Box Elder seed. I am prepared to fill tree claim orders at lower figures than in previous years.

EVERGREENS.

There are but few I feel to recommend. All have to be protected the first two or three years growth.

ARBORVITÆ.—Valuable for hedge and screens, can be shaped to any shape.

NORWAY SPRUCE.—Nice for single trees, all kinds have to be dwarfed in this climate, keep roots moist until planted.

SHRUBS.

LILAC, WHITE, PERSIAN AND PURPLE.—All well-known, hardy shrubs and very fragrant bloomers.

SNOWBALL.—Quite satisfactory, has to be protected in winter.

AMERICAN IVY, OR VIRGINIA CREEPER.—A rapid climber, foliage changes in autumn to purple and scarlet.

ROSES.

QUEEN OF THE PRAIRIE.—(Climbing.) A bright rosy red, strong grower and free bloomer.

DOUBLE MICHIGAN.—(Climbing.) Vigorous and hardy, two weeks later than Queen; blooms in large clusters, bright red.

MADAM PLANTIER.—Pure white, showy, wonderfully free bloomer.

HARRISONI.—Yellow, quite showy; one of the hardiest roses grown.

MOSS ROSES.—Princess Adelaide, one of the hardiest and freest bloomers.

PERPETUAL ROSES.—(Blooming at intervals through the season.) Ten or fifteen sorts; quite beautiful, distinct in form and color. All roses need winter protection.

BULB AND HERBACEOUS PLANTS.

DICENTRA SPECTABALIS. (BLEEDING HEART.—Very beautiful, one of the hardiest bulbs grown.

PÆONIA ROSES.—Sweet scented, bright rose color; very hardy; free bloomer.

PÆONIA WHITTLEJII.—Pure White.) Very showy; easily cultivated, sweet scented, hardy. I also furnish a fine assortment of Lilies—Japan and Valley.

PHLOXES.—Distinct in color.

TULIPS.—Choice assortment, single and double.

GLADIOLA'S.—Assorted, without names.

I conclude my catalogue by saying that I have a deep interest in the trees and plants I furnish my customers. If they succeed in growing them my business increases and more satisfactory. I have found that trees bought in autumn and carefully buried for winter do full better than those dug in Nursery in spring. Buried properly they are perfectly safe and are on hand for early spring planting. I guarantee my customers young, healthy trees and plants, in good order when delivered. The firm of Haseltine Bros., having been dissolved, I continue business still on the old Nursery grounds. Special inducements given on large orders coming from a number of parties in same neighborhood.

Sells Brothers, the Buckeye Boys, Who have Demonstrated Success, Coming with a Fifty-Cage Menagerie and Grand Quadruple Circus.

Fargo Argus.

According to the report of the advance agent, the genial and somewhat accomplished M. J. O'Neill, who arrived yesterday in company with Mr. Peter Sells, jr., in his private car, and whose myrmidons are now busily engaged in painting red the whole city, there is no "great four ring circus" like Sells Brothers in all the whole world beside.

Native modesty prevents Mr. O'Neill from admitting more himself, and so he has kindly left with The Argus a few slips clipped from the leading papers of Chicago, a place down at the foot of Lake Michigan.

Any one can readily see from the cognomen of the companionable advance agent, that his fine Itialian hand would naturally evidence its work in writing of the simple wonders of this vast aggregation of consolidated wonder of towering and overpowering greatness, so to speak. The proprietors of this show admit themselves that over two hundred stars, "not mentioned in the bills," are a part of the attractions, besides the "scores of dens of wild animals" too numerous to mention and horrible to relate. They have secular as well as sacred elephants, hosts of camels, droves of kangaroos and the usual number of side shows, not down in the bills. Every man connected with the show from the oily advance agent, to the myrmidom who lies low in the rear of the tent to prevent the surreptitious advent of the urchin who seeks to "crawl in" under the canvas," is a perfect gentleman—mostly from Ohio and belong to Mrs. Hayes temperance society.

Reams of paper might be spoiled in working up the wonders of this mastodon nondescript, three-horned, four-ringed circus and menagerie, but all the boys know Sells, and it is only necessary to say, "he is coming Father Abraham 600,000 more."

Chicago Tribune.

The Zoological collection is one of rare interest. The two hippopotami, which are far more docile than the corn-fed pig which pursues his devious way from the stock-yards to the immolation on the altar of commerce, are magnificent specimens, whether in the ring, into which they are introduced by their keeper, or in their tank, in which they disport with as much negligence as in the muddy water of the Nile. The two woolly elephants, which are multum in parvo so far as name and species are concerned, proved to be the irresistible "mashers" of the collection. They were by all odds the pets of the women and children.

The delicate giraffe, with a yard of throat subject to diphtheria and with decidedly weak lungs, was also an object of attention on the part of many visitors, who admired his graceful pose and agility of movement. The three-horned rhinoceros, with his Shakspearean brow, pig eyes and forbidding jaws, also proved an attraction, and the vast majority of those who watched him munching his fodder wondered if he were really as fierce an animal as is usually represented on the thrilling poster.

Chicago Daily Inter-Ocean, May 17, 1884.

It was "Sell's Brothers' Confederation of Stupendous Railroad Shows." After seeing the show it is but necessary to say that it is a good one and well deserving the patronage it received yesterday. The canvas covers seats for between 8,000 and 9,000 people, and yesterday afternoon there was a full attendance.

CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.

Summer has come at last with a probability of hot weather, which is an absolute requirement for maturing all sorts of crops. The cool spring necessitates the forcing process and people must be willing to endure it for the sake of material gains.

The supperintendent of public schools in New York has reiterated the opinions of his predecessors that the law of that state allows neither religious intruction nor religious exercises in the public schools, including reading the bible, prayers, religious singing, etc.

In 1876 the total expenditure in Great Britain for beer, wine and spirits amounted to the astounding sum of $786,000,000. Since that terrible maximum was reached the annual sum has been irregularly, but, on the whole, steadely cut down, until last year the reduction amounted to over a hundred million dollars.

The Scientific American is clearly of the opinion that electric light wires should be buried, because when above ground they are dangerous to life and property. This coincides with the popular conclusion. It has been demonstrated scores of times that death and destruction travel on these wires. Whatever the cost of putting them there, the only place for these streaks of lightning is under ground.

In the days of Andrew Jackson hardly a public man possessed the luxury of a private secretary, to say nothing of a shorthand amanuensis. Now there is scarce a man in public life of any prominance who has not a phonographic secretary accompanying him on all occasions. Every senator has a private secretary, paid from the public funds, and an attempt was made, that failed, to give every representative a secretary at the expense of the people.

The New York Commercial Bulletin is usually very temperate in the use of language, but in an article upon "Financial Wreckers," it indulges in terms indicative of the deepest indignation. Speaking of Wall street stock brokers who "bear" the market by illegitimate means, it calls them "brigands, petroleum fiends and dynamite destructionists," and it calls upon the Stock Exchange to interfere or accept responsibility for the disgrace.

Congress has granted Mrs. De Long, widow of the commander of the Jeannette expedition, a pension of fifty dollars a month. There are now about a hundred women on the pension roll who receive from thirty to four hundred dollars per month. There are forty-three widows of general officers who receive $30 and thirty others who get $50 per month. The widow of Admiral Farragut has an annual pension of $2,000, and the surviving widows of certain presidents have each $5,000 a year.

A prominent religious paper openly advocates the government of cities by a few men selected for that purpose outside parties, i. e. State legislatures, etc. Few people are aware of the insidious methods inculcated in various quarters to break down "government of the people, by the people and for the people." Self government is virtually pronounced a failure, and hence juries must be abolished and the right of suffrage taken away or very much restricted. Freemen should remember that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

U. S. Grant, Jr., and the firm of Grant & Ward are the chief stockholders of the Belmont coal mines, which are situated in Jackson county, Alabama. The mines have continued in full operation since their failure until last week, when work was stopped and a notice was posted that they had shut down on account of the failure of Grant & Ward. Seven hundred hands are thrown out of employment. The mines are quite valuable. They were purchased by the Grants from Gen. John B. Gordon.

Col. J. O. P. Burnside of Freeport, Ill., a near relative of the late Senator Burnside of Rhode Island, is charged with the embezzlement of $40,000, while disbursing officer of the Post office department of Washington. It is the old story of living beyond his means having been foolishly extravagant while receiving only a small salary. To keep up his expensive and imposing style in society, he needed more money than he earned legitimately and then robbed the government. The state of society at Washington that leads to such offences should be reformed. It is no credit to any public officer or member of congress to spend more than he earns.

A Philadelphia clergyman has taken steps to swear out a warrant for Bob Ingersoll's arrest for blasphemy. He has found an old statute, which was reenacted, however, no longer ago than 1860, which provides that any person who shall willfully, premeditatedly and despitefully blaspheme shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not exceeding $100 and imprisonment not exceeding three months, and he thinks there would be no trouble in getting Ingersoll in jail. It is said that Mr. Ingersoll left Philadelphia in a hurry on learning that he was in danger of incarceration. The old statute was reenacted by mistake, and prosecutions under it are generally regarded as persecution.

CHICAGO CONVENTION.

Full Proceedings of the Republican Presidential Convention at Chicago.

James G. Blaine for President and John A. Logan for Vice President.

Called to Order.

CHICAGO, June 3.—The Republican national convention was called to order at 12:25 p. m. by United States Senator Sabin of Minnesota as follows:

Gentlemen of the Eighth Republican National Convention: The hour having arrived that was appointed for the meeting of this convention, it will now be opened by prayer, by Rev. Mr. Bristol.

CHAIRMAN SABIN'S ADDRESS.

Mr. Sabin—Gentlemen of the Convention: On behalf of the national Republican committee, permit me to welcome you to Chicago. As chairman of the committee it is my duty and pleasure to call you to order as a national Republican convention. This city, already known as the city of conventions, is among the most cherished of all the spots of our country, sacred to the memories of a Republican. It is the birthplace of Republican victory. On these fields of labor gathered the early fathers of political faith and planned the great battle for the preservation of the Union. [Applause.] Here they chose the immortal chief that led us on to victory—Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.] Here was gathered in council those gifted men who secured the fruits of that long trouble by elevating to the first place in the nation the foremost chieftain of that great contest—Gen. Grant. [Loud applause.] Here was afterward witnessed that sequel triumph which anticipated the wish of the nation by by nominating as color bearer of the party that honored soldier, that shining citizen, the representative among Americans, James A. Garfield. [Loud applause.] Every deliberation of Republican forces on this historic ground has been followed by signal success, and every contest on this spot has carried forward our line of battle, until to-day our forces overlook every position of the enemy. Indeed, so secure now is the integrity of the Union, so firmly imbedded in the constitution and laws of the land are the safeguards of individual liberty, so fairly and fully achieved, that by general consent the time has now arrived for the

in contemplation of new lines of operation. Having compassed the defeat of our opponents on all former occasions, the party is about to set its house in order and take counsel as to the direction and management of its future course. In the comparative lull of party strife which distinguishes the present condition of national politics there is discernible an increasing disposition to look after the men who are to execute, and the methods that are to guide them in the execution of the powers committed to them for the management of the affairs of the republic. As a result of the rule adopted in the last national Republican convention, this committee finds itself constituted by a large majority of gentlemen who have been clothed with the delegated powers of the convention in their several congressional districts. On this consideration may be grounded a hope that the voice of the people [applause] will, beyond recent precedent be felt in moulding the work you are assembled to perform so that its results may be such as to win the unhesitating and undividing support of every lover of these principles by which the party has heretofore triumphed and yet will triumph. [Applause] When we consider the memories of the past so ultimately connected with this city, and even with this edifice which the people of Chicago have so generously placed at your disposal, when we reflect upon the deep-seated concern among all people in the result of your deliberations and the various incentives to the abandonment of personal ambition in the party welfare, you cannot wonder that the committee, and beyond it the great Republican masses, extend you a most hearty welcome in this scene of labor in the constant hope that your efforts will result in such an exposition of Republican doctrine and disclose such an appreciation of Republican men to the choice of your nominees as to rejoice the hearts of your constituents and keep victory on the side of your ever-victorious banner. In conclusion, at the request of the national Republican committee, I have to propose to you as temporary chairman of the convention the Hon. Powell Clayton of Arkansas. [Loud applause.]

THE TEMPORARY CHAIRMANSHIP.

Mr. Lodge of Massachusetts.

Mr. Chairman—In accordance with the vote of the chairman of the committee, in accordance with precedent, you have presented the name of a gentleman as temporary chairman with no view of introducing any personal contest, with no view of attempting to make any test of the votes as to the strength of the respective candidates. There are many members of this convention, I believe, who believe that the unanimous election of this gentleman would strengthen the cause. I, therefore, have the honor to move, as it is certainly most desirable, that we should recognize as you have done, Mr. Chairman, the Republicans of the South. [Applause.] I, therefore, desire to present the name of a gentleman well known throughout the South for his conspicuous parliamentary ability, for his courage and his character. I move you, Mr. Chairman, to substitute the name of the Hon. John R. Lynch of Mississippi, and I ask sir, that when the vote is taken the roll may be called on that question.

A Delegate—I second the motion.

The Chair—Gentlemen of the convention, you hear the motion for the substitution for the name of John R. Lynch of Mississippi, and on that motion a call of the roll is demanded.

The committee, according to usage had nominated ex-U. S. Senator Powell Clayton of Arkansas for temporary chairman but the nomination was decidedly unpopular, hence the independent nomination of Mr. Lynch, a colored member of Congress from Mississippi. An earnest debate ensued, the argument in favor of Mr. Lynch being that his choice would be a complement to the colored Republicans of the country. Geo. Wm. Curtis and several others spoke in behalf of Lynch, and several delegates argued in favor of sustaining the actions of the committee.

The roll was called and the secretary announced the result as follows: John R. Lynch 431; Powell Clayton 387. In Minnesota, D. M. Sabin voted for Lynch, and so did C. K. Davis, but the latter hurriedly changed his vote to Clayton. Graves, Gould, Rogers, Langdon and Nowel made up Lynch's 6; and Clayton had Davis, Armstrong, Cokney, Crosby, Canfield, Hall, Barto and Page, leaving the delegation divided 6 to 8.

The following shows the vote by states:

Gen. Clayton—I move to make the election of John R. Lynch unanimous.

This was carried unanimously.

The Chair—John R. Lynch is temporary chairman. The chair would appoint as a committee to escort Mr. Lynch to the platform, Gen. Powell Clayton of Arkansas, Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts, and Henry Taft of South Carolina. The gentlemen will please await upon him to the platform.

Mr. Lynch appearing, Senator Sabin said: Gentlemen of the Convention: I have the honor and the great pleasure to present to you as temporary chairman of this convention, the Hon. John R. Lynch of Mississippi.

CHAIRMAN LYNCH'S SPEECH.

Gentlemen of the Convention: I feel that I ought not to thank you for the distinguished honor you have conferred upon me, nor do I; nevertheless from the standpoint, that no patriot should fail to respond to his country's call, and that no loyal member of his party should fail to comply with the demand of his party I yield with reluctance to your decision and assume the duties of the position to which you have assigned me. Every member of this convention who has approached me on this subject within the last few hours knows that this position was neither expected nor desired by me. If, therefore, there is any such thing as a man having honors thrust upon him, you have an exemplification in this case. [Laughter and applause.] I came to this convention not for the purpose of securing the defeat or success of any person, but for the purpose of contributing, to the extent of my vote and my influence, to make Republican success in November next an assured fact. [Cheers.] I hope and believe that the assembled wisdom of the Republican party of this country, through its chosen representatives, in this hall will so shape its platform and will present such candidates before the American people as will make that victory beyond a shadow of a doubt. [illegible] candidates. I do not wish [illegible] to indicate anything relative to the [illegible] with an unmistakable determination to give to the candidates of this convention a loyal and hearty support, whoever they may be. [Cheers.] I am satisfied, in my own mind, that when we go before the people of this country our action will be ratified, because the great heart of the American people will never consent to have a political party gain the ascendancy of this government whose chief reliance is on a fraudulent ballot and on violence at the polls. [Applause.] I am satisfied that the people of this country are too loyal ever to allow a man to be inaugurated president of the United States whose title to the position is brought forth in fraud. I am satisfied that the American people will ratify our action because they will never consent to have a revenue system for the government other than one that will not only raise the necessary revenue for its support, but will also be sufficient to protect every American citizen in his business. [Cheers.] Gentlemen, not for myself, but perhaps in obedience to custom, I thank you for the honor you have conferred upon me.

On motion of Mr. Russel of New York, Mr. Sheard of New York and Mr. Lee of Pennsylvania were appointed temporary secretaries. The chair then called for the names of the delegates to serve on the various committees—credentials, resolutions, rules and order of business which occupied a great deal of time.

The committee men selected by the delegations of Northwestern States are as follows:

Dakota—Permanent organization, N. E. Nelson; credentials, J. L. Jolly; resolutions, J. L. Jolly.

Montana—Permanent organization and credentials, Lee Mantle; rules and resolutions, W. F. Saunders.

Minnesota—Credentials, R. B. Langdon; rules and order of business, T. H. Armstrong; permanent organiation, O. B. Gould; resolutions, Liberty Hall.

Wisconsin.—E. W. Keyes was made chairman and George B. Shaw secretary. J. H. Mead was named for the committee on credentials. Calvert Spensley on resolutions, F. C. Winckler on permanent organization and C. M. Butt on rules. Edwin Sanderson was selected for the national committee and E. H. Broadhead as vice president for the convention.

Mr. Pearce of Massachusetts offered the following resolution which was referred to committe on resolutions:

Resolved, That the subject of the revised apportionment of delegates to future national conventions and of the revised apportionment of members of the national committee be referred to the committee on rules and order of business with leave to report before the ballot for president.

THE PROHIBITION MEMORIAL.

Mr. Donnan of Iowa presented the following memorial, which, after a long discussion was read by the secretary:

We, members of the Woman's Christian Temperance union of the states herein represented by the signatures of our officers, believe that while the personal habits of the nation can be largely restrained by an appeal to the intellect, through argument to the heart, through sympathy, and to the conscience through the motives of religion, the traffic in those poisons will be best controlled by a prohibitory law. We believe the teachings of science, experience and the golden rule combine to testify against the traffic in alcoholic liquors as a drink, and the homes of America, which are the citadels of patriotism, purity and happiness, have no enemy so relentless as the American saloon. Therefore, as citizens of the United States, irrespective of sect or section, but having deeply at heart the protection of our homes, we do hereby respectfully and earnestly petition you to advocate and adopt such measures as are requisite to the end that prohibition of the importation, exportation, manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages may become an integral part of the national constitution, and that your party candidate shall be by character and public pledge committed to a national prohibitory constitutional amendment. [Signed], Francis E. Willard, president; Caroline B. Buell, corresponding secretary; Mary A. Woodbridge, recording secretary; L. M. Stevens, assistant secretary; Esther Pugh, treasurer.

The Chair:—It is referred to the committee on rules.

GIVING THE IRISH A CHANCE.

Leslie W. Bissell of New York presented the following which was referred to the committee on resolutions:

Resolved, That the committee on resolutions be and they are hereby directed to give a hearing to a committee appointed by the Irish National Land league of America to present a memorial to this convention on the subject of ownership of realty in the United States by foreigners.

Mr. Bayne moved to adjourn till to-morrow at 11 a. m. Carried. After the adjournment, the chair stated that committees on rules and credentials would meet in the hall, and the committee proceeded to the work on hand.

SECOND DAY.

This was emphatically a day of waiting, the committee on credentials not being ready to report.

Rev. Mr. Barrows, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Chicago, addressed the Throne of Grace.

Mr. Gary of Maryland presented a memorial of the Maryland State Temperance alliance on behalf of prohibition. It was read and referred to the committee on resolutions.

Mr. Mason, of Delaware, offered a resolution in favor of a presidential term of six years, and ineligibility thereafter. Referred.

Senator Plumb, of Kansas, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That American land should belong alone to those willing to assume the duties and responsibilities of American citizenship. The best interests of the republic are with those who are bound to it by the tie of ownership and possession of it. The system of tenant farming and absentee landlordism, which has disturbed Ireland and destroyed the peace of Europe, is opposed to the doctrine of the fathers, and has no place in the policy of a republic.

Referred to committee.

Mr. Hawkins, of Tennessee, offered the following resolution, and moved its immediate passage:

Resolved, As the sense of this convention, that every member of it is bound in honor to support its nominee, whoever that nominee may be; that no man should hold a seat here who is not ready to so agree.

The resolution was advocated by the mover and one or two others and severely denounced by George William Curtis and Mr. Pearce of Massachusetts. Curtis said: "A Republican and a free man I came into this convention. By the grace of God, a Republican and a free man will I go out of this convention. The gentleman who was last upon the floor dared any one upon this floor to vote against that resolution. I say to him in reply that the presentation of such a resolution in such a convention as this is a stigma, an insult upon every man who stands here. This question is not a new question precisely; the same motion was brought up at the last convention, and a man from West Virginia—I honor his name—that man said in the face of the roaring galleries and in the face of all this success; this man from West Virginia said: 'I am a Republican who carries his sovereignty under his own hat.' Now, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Campbell's position in that convention, the wise reflection, the afterthought of the Republican convention of 1880, confirmed.

Mr. Hawkins finally withdrew the resolutions: Other resolutions were offered relating to temperance, the elections of delegates, etc., to future conventions which were referred.

The committee on permanent organization reported as permanent president of the convention, Hon. John B. Henderson of Missouri, and lists of honorary vice-presidents and secretaries. The chair appointed to conduct the permanent president of the convention to the stand, Hon. G. A. Grow of Pennsylvania, George F. Hoar of Massachusetts and G. B. Williams of Indiana. The committee appointed by the temporary chairman escorted Mr. Henderson to the platform, and he spoke as follows:

CHAIRMAN HENDERSON'S SPEECH.

Gentlemen of the Convention: We have assembled to survey the past history of the party; to rejoice as we may, because of the good it has done; to correct the errors there be; to discover if possible the wants of the present and with patriotic firmness to provide for the future. Our past history is the Union preserved, slavery abolished by its former victims are equally and honorably by our sides in this convention. The public faith is maintained. We have unbounded credit at home and abroad, a currency convertible into coin and the pulses of industry throbbing with renewed health and vigor in every section of a prosperous and peaceful country. These are the fruits of triumph over adverse policies gained in the military and civil conflicts of the last twenty-four years. Out of these conflicts has come a race of heroes and statesmen challenging confidence and love at home and respect and admiration abroad; and now, when we came to select a standard bearer for the approaching conflict, our chief embarrassment is not in the want but in the abundance of presidential material. New York has her true and tried statesman, upon whose administration and fierce and even unfriendly light of public scrutiny has been turned, and the universal verdict is, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." [Applause.]

THE VERMONT HAS HER GREAT STATESMAN

whose mind is as clear as the crystal springs of his native state, and whose virtue is as firm as its granite hills; Ohio can come with a name whose history is the history of the Republican party itself; Illinois can come with one who never failed in the discharge of public duty, whether in the council chamber or on the field of battle. Maine has her honored favorite, whose splendid abilities and personal qualities have endeared him to the hearts of his friends, and the brilliancy of whose genius challenges the admiration of all. Connecticut and Indiana may come to us with names scarcely less illustrious than those. And now, in conclusion, if, because of personal disagreements or emergencies, another name is sought, there yet remains that grand old hero of Kenesaw Mountain and Atlanta. When patriotism calls he cannot, if he would, be silent; but, grasping that banner to him so dear, which he has already borne in triumph, he will march to a civic victory no less renowned than those of war. I thank you, gentlemen, for this distinguished mark of confidence.

A delegate from Arizona offered the following resolution, to be referred to the committee on resolutions: Resolved, That the appointment of offices in the territories by the president ought to be from the bona fide residents of the territories, and in accordance with the wishes of the people thereof.

Resolutions were also offered and referred in favor of a farmer in the cabinet, in the person of the commissioner of agriculture; that woman shall have a right to vote, all of which were referred. The committee on credentials were not ready to report and a recess was taken to 7 o'clock p. m.

On reassembling the committee on credentials informed the convention that they would not be ready to report this evening.

The secretary read the following message:

To Honorable Senator Dolph of Oregon—I have to report that there is no longer any doubt that the Republicans have carried a majority of the legislature of this state, which will secure a gain of a senator to the United States senate. [Applause.] They have also elected a Republican representative in congress, and Oregon is safe for the nominee of this convention for president.

The convention then adjourned.

THIRD DAY.

Thursday Chairman Henderson called the convention to order, when prayer was offered by Bishop Fallows, of the Reformed Episcopal church.

The committee on credentials reported, and the report was unanimously adopted.

The admission of the Mahone delegation was received with loud and prolonged applause.

By a light vote, but a unanimous one, the report of the committee on rules was adopted. Immediately afterwards Parks of California, chairman of the last named committee, sent up the majority report on apportionment for representation, and after it was read Gen. R. R. Bishop, of Massachusetts, sent up the minority report. The minority report provides for an additional delegate for each Republican congressman, and one additional for each 10,000 republican votes or major fraction thereof.

The majority report was adopted after a spirited debate, without dissent, as the minority was vehemently opposed by all the delegates from the South and many from the North.

The Platform.

The committee on resolutions, through Mr. McKinley, chairman, made its report, which was unanimously adopted, as follows:

The Republicans of the United States in national convention assembled, renew their allegiance to the principles upon which they have triumphed in six successive presidential elections, and congratulate the American people on the attainment of so many results in legislation and administration by which the Republican party has, after saving the Union, done so much to render its institutions just, equal and beneficial; the safeguard of liberty and the embodiment of the best thought and highest purposes of our citizens, the Republican party has gained its strength by quick and faithful response to the demands of the people for the freedom and the equality of all men for a united nation, assuring the rights of all citizens for the elevation of labor, for an honest currency, for purity in legislation and for integrity and accountability in all departments of the government, and it accepts anew the duty of leading in the work of progress and reform.

GARFIELD AND ARTHUR.

We lament the death of President Garfield, whose sound statesmanship, long conspicuous in congress, gave promise of a strong and successful administration—a promise fully realized during the short period of his office as president of the United States. His distinguished success in war and peace have endeared him to the hearts of the American people. In the administration of President Arthur, we recognize a wise, conservative and patriotic policy, under which the country has been blessed with remarkable prosperity, and we believe his eminent services are entitled to and will receive the hearty approval of every citizen.

THE TARIFF QUESTION.

It is the first duty of a good government to protect the rights and promote the interest of its own people. The largest diversity of industry is most productive of general prosperity and of the comfort and independence of the people. We therefore demand that the imposition of duties on foreign imports shall be made not for revenue only, but that in raising the requisite revenues for the government such duties shall be so levied as to afford security to our diversified industries and protection to the rights and wages of the laborer, to the end that active and intelligent labor as well as capital may have its just award and the laboring man his full share in the national prosperity. Against the so-called economy system of the Democratic party which would degrade our labor to the foreign standard, we enter our earnest protest. The Democratic party has failed completely to relieve the people of the burden of unnecessary taxation by a wise reduction of the surplus. The Republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff and to reduce the surplus, not by the vicarious and indiscriminate process of horizontal reduction, but by such methods as will relieve the taxpayer without injuring the laborer. Among the great productive interests of the country we recognize the importance of sheep husbandry in the United States, the serious depression which it is now experiencing, and the danger threatened its future prosperity, and we therefore respect the demands of the representatives of this important agricultural interest for a readjustment of duty upon foreign wool, in order that such industry shall have full and adequate protection.

THE CURRENCY.

We have always recommended the best money known to the civilized world, and we urge that efforts be made to unite all commercial nations in the establishment of an international standard which shall fix all the relative value of gold and silver coinage.

REGULATING COMMERCE.

The regulation of commerce with foreign nations and between the states is one of the most important prerogatives of the general government, and the Republican party distinctly announces its purpose to support such legislation as will fully and effectually carry out the constitutional power of congress over interstate commerce. The principle of the public regulation of railway corporations is a wise and salutary one for the protection of all classes of the people, and we favor legislation that shall prevent unjust discrimination and excessive charges for transportation, and that shall secure to the people and the railways alike the fair and equal protection of the laws.

LABOR.

We favor the establishment of a national bureau of labor, the enforcement of the eight hour law, a wise and judicious system of general education by adequate appropriation from the national revenues whenever the same is needed. We believe that everywhere protection to a citizen of American birth must be secured to citizens by American adoption, and we favor the settlement of national differences by international arbitration. The Republican party having its birth in a hatred of the slave labor and a desire that all men may be truly free and equal, is inalienably opposed to placing our workingmen in competition with any form of servile labor whatever, at home or abroad. In this spirit we denounce the importation of contract labor, whether from Europe or Asia, as an offense against the spirit of American institutions, and we pledge ourselves to sustain the present law restricting Chinese immigration and to provide such further legislation as is necessary to carry out its purpose.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Reform of the civil service auspiciously begun under a Republican administration should be completed by the further extension of the reformed system already established by law to all grades of the service to which it is applicable. The spirit and purpose of the reform should be observed in the executive appointments, and all laws at variance with the objects of existing reformed legislation should be repealed, to the end that the dangers to free institutions which lurk in the power of official patronage may be wisely and effectually averted.

THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

The public lands are the heritage of the people of the United States, and should be reserved, as far as possible, for small holdings by actual settlers. We are opposed to the acquisition of large tracts of these lands by corporations or individuals, especially where such holdings are in the hands of non-residents or aliens, and we will endeavor to obtain such legislation as will tend to correct this evil. We demand of congress the speedy forfeiture of all land grants which have lapsed by reason of non-compliance with the acts of incorporation, in all cases where there has been no attempt in good faith to perform the condition of such grants.

THE PENSIONERS.

The grateful thanks of the American people are due to the Union soldiers and sailors of the late war, and the Republican party stands pledged to suitable pensions for all who were disabled, and for the widows and orphans of those who died in the war. The Republican party also pledges itself to the repeal of the limitation contained in the act of 1879, so that all invalid soldiers shall share alike, and their pensions begin with the date of disability or discharge, and not with the date of the application.

FOREIGN POLICY AND THE NAVY.

The Republican party favors a policy which shall keep us from entangling alliances with foreign nations, and which gives us the right to expect that foreign nations shall refrain from meddling in American affairs. The policy which seeks peace can trade with all powers, but especially with those of the Western hemisphere.

We demand the restoration of our navy to its old time strength and efficiency, that it may in any sea protect the rights of American citizens and the interests of American commerce, and we call upon congress to remove the burdens under which American shipping has been depressed, so that it may again be true that we have a commerce which leaves no sea unexplored, and a navy which takes no law from superior force.

THE TERRITORIES AND POLYGAMY.

Resolved, That the appointments by the president to officers in the territories should be made from bona fide citizens and residents of the territories where they are to serve.

Resolved, That it is the duty of congress to enact such laws as shall promptly and effectually suppress the system of polygamy within our territory and divorce the political from the ecclesiastical power of the so-called Mormon church, and that the law so enacted should be rigidly enforced by the civil authorities if possible and the military if need be.

A FREE BALLOT.

The people of the United States in their organized capacity constitute a nation and not a mere confederacy of states. The national government is supreme within the sphere of its national duty, but the states have reserved rights which should be faithfully maintained, each should be guarded with zealous care, so that the harmony of our system of government may be preserved and the Union kept inviolate. The perpetuity of our institutions rest on the maintenance of a free ballot, honest and correct returns. We denounce the fraud and violence practiced by the Democracy in the Southern states, by which the will of the voters is defeated, as dangerous to the preservation of free institutions. We solemnly arraign the Democratic party as being the guilty recipient of the fruits of such fraud and violence. We extend to the Republicans of the South, regardless of their former party affiliations, our cordial sympathy, and pledge to them our most earnest efforts to promote the passage of such legislation as will secure to every citizen, of whatever race or color, the full and complete recognition, possession and exercise of all civil and political rights.

The next business in order was the call of states for the announcement of members of the national committee. A motion to postpone the call was made and voted down, and the call was then proceeded with.

The convention then took a recess until 7 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

Chairman Henderson called the convention and the vast audience to order at 7:30 p. m.

After a little unimportant motions, the President said: The secretary will now call the roll of states, and when the name of a state having a candidate to present is called, the party selected to make the presentation will come forward and speak. The secretary then proceeded to call the roll of states, calling Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, and Connecticut, and, when the latter state was called, Mr. Brandagee of Connecticut arose, and took the stand.

Mr. Brandagee personally is a reduced and handsomer edition of ex-Gov. John S. Pillsbury. When midway in his speech he named Gen. Joseph B. Hawley, the applause was a surprise to every one. It was spontaneous, exultant, continued and renewed more than once. Applause also followed fast on the heels of the announcement, "If you will not support our man, we'll support yours." A solid nonpareil biography was injected to the leaded minion by his eulogy, and even as a Boswell he was not dry, but drew forth rounds of applause, especially when, as was natural, he referred to the soldierly record of his candidate. After he had spoken eighteen minutes he partly lost his grip on his hearers and gavel rapping was necessary, but a few happy sentences and the mention of Gen. Grant gave him new sway, which was not lost again. Mr. Brandagee commenced at nineteen minutes of 8, and the sun went down on his peroration at four minutes after 8, the speech having consumed twenty-three minutes.

The decent cheers which bade farewell to the portly figure of Brandagee had hardly died away when the secretary, running rapidly down the list of states, met an obstruction at Illinois, which developed in the shape of a ramrod-like, black-robed form, surmounted by an eagle beak and a rasping voice, surrounded by a Presbyterian-elder sort of face, all bearing the name of Shelby M. Cullom, United States senator.

He made himself heard magnificently, and made a better impression on the convention than some better speakers. The applause which the speech was skillfully framed to evoke just at the right time was judiciously distributed among the names of Lincoln, Grant and Logan—the latter, of course, receiving double measure.

The frame work of the speech was not so distinctly biographical as Brandagee's, and as there were more frequent catch phrases for applause, Mr. Cullom may be said to have done himself proud. When Gen. B. M. Prentiss of Bothany, Mo., ascended the platform and commenced to second the nomination of John A. Logan, His audience was chary of applause at first, except when Logan's name was mentioned; and on one occasion, evidently as a sort of relief the applause was prolonged until the chair had to call order. After that the audience—sadly be it spoken—guyed Gen. Prentiss, and, when he got mixed in his historical selections, ironical cheers drowned him out. He stepped down, and no one was saddened.

Expectation waited for the name of the state of Maine, was generously rewarded by such a clamorous burst of sound as had not been heard from human throats since the rafters of this same building trembled obedient to the name of Grant four years ago. There was no crescendo of applause, but a thunderous crash that brought delegates, alternates, and reporters to their feet in a moment. The cheers were so distributed on the floor that the silent spaces were concealed when they rose, and the whole audience seemed to be on its feet; every handkerchief, fan and other object of portable property in the hall seemed to fly into the air, and every voice in the building seemed to join in the screaming diapason of mad applause.

After the chairman had succeeded in producing comparative quiet, Judge West of Ohio was introduced. The sensation was intense, and the interest in Mr. West on account of his commanding presence, and sympathy for his infirmity, brought all to silence in the vast hall. The fine quality of Judge West's eloquence was not marred by injudicious and indiscernible cheering as it progressed.

Many a correspondent saw his paper dimly through eloquence-bidden mist of tears as Judge William West of Bellefontaine lifted his sightless eyes toward the sky and pointed with his long, scholarly finger toward "those portals of light" whence Abraham Lincoln looked upon the scene.

The tall attenuated figure, Southern in general aspect and dress, was seated after the first few sentences, but still towered above any in its neighborhood. The eyes, which can only look inward, had nothing ghastly; their steadfastness, and the marble lips and typically American face, and its Brother Jonathan beard of grayish tint told thrillingly of the emotions seething in the heart below, and transmitted to the thousands in front by a high, resonant, attention-compelling voice, and incisive accent.

His presentation was as follows:

Gentlemen, the Republican party demands of this convention a nominee whose inspiration and glorious prestige shall carry the presidency with or without the state of New York; one that will carry the legislatures of the several states and avert the sacrifice of the United States senate; that shall sweep into the tide the congressional districts to recover the house of representatives and restore it to the Republican party. Three millions of Republicans believe that that man who, from the baptism of blood on the plains of Kansas to the toll of the immortal Garfield, in all that struggle of humanity and progress wherever humanity desires succor, where love for freedom called for protection, wherever the country called for a defender, wherever blows fall thickest and fastest, there in the fore front of the battle to wave the white plume of James G. Blaine, our

HENRY OF NAVARRE.

Nominate him, and the shouts of September victory in Maine will be re-echoed by the thunder of the October victory in Ohio. Nominate him, and the camp fires and beacon lights will illuminate the continent from the Golden Gate to Cleopatra's Needle; nominate him, and the millions who are now in waiting will rally to swell the column of victory that is sweeping on in the name of the majority of the delegates from the Republican states, and of our glorious constituencies who must fight this battle, I nominate James G. Blaine of Maine.

Gov. Davis' Appearance.

The cheering at the close of West's speech was not long enough to embarrass Gov. Davis, whose portly form, attired in a rather too full-skirted frock coat, appeared on the platform just at the right time. His manner was easy and assured. The speech was barely four minutes long, but the close left no sense of incompleteness. Perhaps the highest compliment paid it was the buzz of inquiry as to "who this man Davis is," that succeeded the first pause of inattention.

The Chairman introduced Gov. Davis:

Cushman K. Davis of Minnesota—Mr. President and gentlemen of the convention: In face of the demonstration which we have seen and heard it would seem scarcely necessary to second a nomination which appears already to be a foregone conclusion. [Cheers and applause.] In the name of the people of Minnesota it gives me the greatest pleasure to second the nomination of James G. Blaine of Maine [vigorous cheering], who has never been defeated by the people. [Cries throughout the house: "No, no; never has been defeated."] He has borne his great faculties so nobly that year after year in success and adversity, he has grown so completely into the affections of the people of this country that at this moment he is in his own person the embodiment of the definition of their choice for president of the United States. [Cheers and applause and cries of "Louder."] This preference is not the growth of any locality or of any one idea. It springs not from any cold calculation of expediency, although it is coincident with the highest expediency—the expediency of success; it is the majestic voice of three million of the great party of the Union or national progress, which emancipated man, which raised the country from the hell of civil war and made it so great that neither foreign foe nor domestic factions can affect it where it stands, secure on the eternal basis of right whereon it has been placed. Mr. Blaine is not the man of any state; he has grown far beyond that. To-day his persistent popularity, his magnificent personal traits, his unfailing tact, his unswerving loyalty to his party, and his commanding statesmanship are honored in every community, from Maine to California [applause], and from the St. Lawrence to the Gulf. Without the aid of without self-seeking, without combination, with no [illegible] to his success as the ruin of another man he stands here to-day with all these attributes, and the people of this country ask this convention to gratify their twice-deferred desire. [Applause.] He stands upon the friendship and confidence of Garfield, and when the life of the nation seemed ebbing away with the spirit of the great son of Ohio, when all the functions of government were languid, when business men felt the need of security, it was upon the arm of the great secretary that the nation leaned. He has conducted our foreign affairs so as to make us respected abroad, and that, too, upon principles almost coeval with the foundations of this government. [Applause.] He has undergone defeat in two conventions, and has risen from each with greater strength than before. [Applause.] The campaigns which followed were most momentous, and imperiled the very existence of the party. Did he sulk in his tent like Achilles before the walls of Troy? [Cries of "No," "No," from all over the hall.] No; he rose upon the ruins of his adversity and made them monuments of his glory. [Cheers.] He led his competitors through the road of triumph, to the White House. No word from him that the nomination was unfortunate. No auspices from him of want of success; but then he, this man from Maine, came forth with all his armament like a magnificent war vessel, every pennant flying, every sail set, every man at his post, and every gun thundering from its sides. [Applause.] This is the man—faithful to all trusts, superior to any fortunes, beloved as an American statesman has ever been—whom we present for your suffrages. [Cheers and applause.]

William C. Goodloe of Kentucky also spoke in support of the nomination. Although coming from that Democratic section, he disclaimed any semblance of dictation to Republican states as to whom they should have for their candidates. [Applause.] It seemed to him, however, that the plain and simple duty of the people's delegates was to ratify the people's choice [applause] conscientiously believing that choice to be the great commoner from Maine, he cheerfully seconded the nomination.

Thomas C. Platt of New York also seconded the nomination of Mr. Blaine, declaring his conviction that with Blaine as the standard bearer of the party, success was assured in New York and victory in the whole country.

GALUSHA A. GROW

of Pennsylvania also spoke in favor of Blaine's nomination.

Galusha A. Grow of Pennsylvania has grown into a familiar figure in the convention, and his white beard and darker mustache, his old-fashioned garrote collar and older-fashioned black stock were readily recognized, as, in choosing his chair for his platform, he rose to second Blaine's nomination on behalf of the majority of Pennsylvania's delegates. Even his audience, however, had grown a little weary of speech-making on one theme, and applauded out of time and tune until Gen. Henderson threatened to clear the galleries.

In excellent taste Luke A. Staley, one of the strongest John Sherman men in the convention, secured silence by reminding the convention that if they were not gentlemen, as well as Republicans, they should be. Mr. Grow was not again interrupted, and wisely concluded in short order.

The roll of states went on until New York was reached, when it burst upon the Blaine men, as thunderously as thousands of throats could voice it, that Arthur had friends in the convention; that there were other coats, hats, handkerchiefs, umbrellas, banners, flags, sheets of paper and "all those other movables" besides the sort owned by the Maine coherents. Martin J. Townsend got on the platform. His manner at first was suited to the matter of his speech, and both were in the line of policy adopted by the Arthur men—to avoid sensationalism and appeal soberly to the business interests of the country.

Like a clarion after a hoarse call rang out the voice of Gen. H. H. Bingham of Philadelphia, the first seconder of Arthur, and the immediate successor of Mr. Townsend. His mention of Arthur's name was again the signal for applause, not long but loud. People who, grown tired, were about to leave the hall, sat down and listened intently, and were not unrewarded.

His tribute to his candidates action in the trying times succeeding Garfield's death was well and worthily given. The familiar figure of John R. Lynch (colored) next appeared, and the audience listened to the pleasant and penetrating tones of his mellow voice with little demonstrative attention. He seconded the nomination of Arthur.

Patrick H. Winston, Jr., of North Carolina, followed Mr. Lynch, and was the third seconder of Arthur's renomination. There was a suspicion of Fourth of Julyism about the speaker.

P. B. S. Pinchback of New Orleans, a handsome colored man with an iron-gray beard, was the Louisiana seconder for Arthur.

Judge Lasker of Ohio nominated John Sherman in an appropriate speech. There were interruptions enough, but he kept his good humor through all, and closing with an effective period, left the convention with the impression that he had heard, not the most polished orator, but the most effective popular speaker of the evening.

Henry Holt, of Mount Sterling, Ky., seconded the nomination. Far down on the list is Vermont, and the hour had gone beyond the midst of night when ex-Gov. John D. Long of Massachusetts took his solid stand to nominate the son of "that brave little state." He paraphrased, in opening, the often quoted sentences of Garfield, appealing from the tumult of a convention to the impassioned judgment of the fireside.

Gov. Long grew more and more toward the higher eloquence which convinces without rousing to excitement. His words were as penetrating as his straightforward gestures, horizontally from the shoulder moment after moment were more impressive through their very awkwardness. Every movement he won the deeper attention of his hearers. Every movement admiration for the speech and the speechmaker grew space.

When he nominated "The honorable, I repeat, the honorable George F. Edmunds of Vermont," and left the platform, the state did not have to lead in the applause, nor was it all for Edmunds. George William Curtis seconded the nomination of Edmunds.

A warm flush relieved the customary paleness of his fine face, his action, without losing its customary majestic grace, had an unaccustomed spring and energy and the supressed excitement of the occasion lent a new thrill to his voice. Like Judge West's speech, as fine, on a different and lower plane, the periods of Curtis' fell on an audience too spellbound for applause, too interested for interruption.

It was an admirable speech and admirably delivered. Senator Edmunds, of all candidates, has been rarely fortunate in all his presentations to the convention.

At the conclusion of Curtis' speech, the clerk continued to call the roll of states until the completion thereof. At 1:45, the convention adjourned until 11 o'clock Friday.

FOURTH DAY.

THE BALLOTING BEGINS.

The Chair—Gentlemen of the convention: There is now nothing in order except to call the roll for the nomination of a candidate for the presidency.

Mr. Turner of Alabama—Mr. President, is that the call of the roll for balloting?

The Chair—For balloting, the nomination of the candidates.

The secretary then proceeded to call the roll of states for the nomination of a candidate for the presidency. After the announcement of the first vote by the secretary, the chair said: "A ballot for a candidate for the presidency having been had without securing a nomination, according to the rules the convention will now proceed to another vote. The secretary will call the roll." This formula was repeated until the fourth and last ballot had been taken. The ballots were as follows:

CONGRATULATIONS.

Telegrams came rushing in upon Blaine almost literally by armfulls. Hundreds of dispatches followed from all parts of the country, from every state in the Union. Following are a few of the most impressive:

Washington, June 6.—Executive Mansion. Hon. James G. Blaine: As the candidate of the Republican party, you will have my earnest and cordial support. [Signed] CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

Mr. Blaine's reply was:

Hon. Chester A. Arthur, President of the United States, Washington, D. C.: Accept my sincere thanks for your cordial assurances.

[Signed.] JAMES G. BLAINE.

Washington, D. C., June 6.—To Hon. J. G. Blaine: I most heartily congratulate you on your nomination. You will be elected.

[Signed] JOHN A. LOGAN.

Mr. Blaine sent the following dispatch to Senator Logan:

I am proud and honored by being associated with you in the national campaign.

[Signed] JAMES G. BLAINE.

Washington, D. C., June 6.—Hon. J. G. Blaine: Accept congratulations and cordial support.

[Signed.] JAMES R. HAWLEY.

Among others sending congratulatory speeches are Henry L. Dawes, Ben Harrison, Murat Halstead and ex-Gov. Cornell.

VICE PRESIDENT.

John A. Logan was named for Vice President and receiving 779 votes, his nomination was made unanimous and the convention adjourned sine die.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

In the senate, among the bills read a third time and passed on Tuesday were the following: Bill introduced by Congor, granting annual leave of absence, with pay, to letter-carriers. It authorizes the postmaster general to employ the number of substitute letter-carriers rendered necessary by the provisions of the bill, the compensation of such substitute to be at the rate of $600 a year. The bill giving a pension of $50 per month to the widow of Gen. Judson Kilpatrick; the bill authorizing the sale of a portion of the Fort Hayes military reservation to the Ellis County Agricultural society of Kansas; the house bill relating to the legislature of Dakota (it provides that the council of the territory shall consist of twenty-four members and the house of representatives of forty members, and at the next general election two members of the council and four of the lower house shall be elected in each of the twelve legislative districts of the territory); the bill introduced by Pendleton to regulate the payment of bills of exchange drawn in foreign countries on persons, firms or corporations in the United States. Adjourned to Monday.

On Tuesday, in the House, Mr. Payson, as a question of privilege, called for consideration the bill reported from the committee on public lands, to prevent unlawful occupancy of public lands. After discussion the bill was passed. It prohibits the enclosure of any public land when the person or corporation making enclosure has no color of title to the land, and makes it lawful for any person to tear down and demolish any such enclosure when it includes more than 160 acres.

In the contested election cases of the present congress the house committee on elections has agreed to allow the following sums for expenses of those interested: Massey-Wise, Virginia, $3,500 each; Chalmers-Manning, Mississippi, $2,000 each; English-Peelle, Indiana, $2,000 each; Wallace-McKinley, Ohio, $2,000 each; Watson-Frederick, Iowa, $2,000 each; Wood-Peters, Kansas, $1,500 each; Craig-Shelley, Alabama, $1,000 each.

Mr. Hayson of Illinois, called up the senate bill to repeal section 1 of the act entitled "An act making a grant of lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain railroad from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas" approved July 4, 1866. In consideration of the forfeiture, the Iron Mountain Railroad company is released from the obligations of a land grant road. An amendment was adopted excluding from this release that part of the railroad between Poplar Bluff, Mo., and the Arkansas state line, and as amended the bill was passed.

The house proceeded to vote on the California & Oregon land grant forfeiture bill, with a result of yeas 145, nays 6; no quorum. A call of the house disclosed the presence of 210 members, and the bill was passed; yeas 150, nays 10.

It is the opinion of Rev. Dr. Eccleston that San Francisco is the Paris of America in the fondness of the people for amusement, their love of display, their disregard of religion and their reckless habits of speculation. He also notes that California has proportionately more suicides than any other state, and finds prolific causes in dissipation, financial embarrassment and domestic trouble.

CROOKSTON, [illegible] MINNESOTA

Summer has come at last, with a probability of hot weather, which is an absolute requirement for maturing all sorts of crops. The cool spring necessitates the forcing process and people must be willing to endure it for the sake of material gain.

The superintendent of public schools in New York has reiterated the opinions of his predecessors that the law of that state allows neither religious intruction nor religious exercises in the public schools, including reading the bible, prayers, religious singing, etc.

In 1876 the total expenditure in Great Britain for beer, wine and spirits amounted to the astounding sum of $736,000,000. Since that terrible maximum was reached the annual sum has been irregularly, but on the whole, steadily cut down, until last year the reduction amounted to over a hundred million dollars.

The Scientific American is clearly of the opinion that electric light wires should be buried, because when above ground they are dangerous to life and property. This coincides with the popular conclusion. It has been demonstrated scores of times that death and destruction travel on these wires. Whatever the cost of putting them there, the only place for these streaks of lightning is under ground.

In the days of Andrew Jackson hardly a public man possessed the luxury of a private secretary, to say nothing of a shorthand amanuensis. Now there is scarce a man in public life of any prominence who has not a phonographic secretary accompanying him on all occasions. Every senator has a private secretary, paid from the public funds, and an attempt was made, that failed, to give every representative a secretary at the expense of the people.

The New York Commercial Bulletin is usually very temperate in the use of language, but in an article upon "Financial Wreckers," it indulges in terms indicative of the deepest indignation. Speaking of Wall street stock brokers who "bear" the market by illegitimate means, it calls them "brigands, petroleum fiends and dynamite destructionists," and it calls upon the Stock Exchange to interfere or accept responsibility for the disgrace.

Congress has granted Mrs. De Long, widow of the commander of the Jeannette expedition, a pension of fifty dollars a month. There are now about a hundred women on the pension roll who receive from thirty to four hundred dollars per month. There are forty-three widows of general officers who receive $30 and thirty others who get $50 per month. The widow of Admiral Farragut has an annual pension of $2,000 and the surviving widows of certain presidents have each $5,000 a year.

A prominent religious paper openly advocates the government of cities by commissions selected for that purpose outside parties, i. e., State legislatures, etc. Few people are aware of the insidious methods inculcated in various quarters to break down government of the people, by the people and for the people. Self-government is virtually pronounced a failure and hence juries must be abolished and the right of suffrage taken away or very much restricted. Freemen should remember that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

U. S. Grant, Jr., and the firm of Grant & Ward are the chief stockholders of the Belmont coal mines, which are situated in Jackson county, Alabama. The mines have continued in full operation since their failure, until last week, when work was stopped and a notice was posted that they had shut down on account of the failure of Grant & Ward. Seven hundred hands are thrown out of employment. The mines are quite valuable. They were purchased by the Grants from Gen. John B. Gordon.

CHICAGO CONVENTION.

Full Proceedings of the Republican Presidential Convention at Chicago.

James G. Blaine for President and John A. Logan for Vice President.

Called to Order.

CHICAGO, June 3.—The Republican national convention was called to order at 12:25 p. m. by United States Senator Sabin of Minnesota as follows:

Gentlemen of the Eighth Republican National Convention: The hour having arrived that was appointed for the meeting of this convention, it will now be opened by prayer by Rev. Mr. Bristol.

CHAIRMAN SABIN'S ADDRESS.

Mr. Sabin—Gentlemen of the Convention: On behalf of the national Republican committee, permit me to welcome you to Chicago. As chairman of the committee it is my duty and pleasure to call you to order as a national Republican convention. This city, already known as the city of conventions, is among the most cherished of all the spots of our country, sacred to the memories of a Republican. It is the birthplace of Republican victory. On these fields of labor gathered the early fathers of political faith and planned the great battle for the preservation of the Union. [Applause.] Here they chose the immortal chief that led us on to victory—Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.] Here was gathered in council those gifted men who secured the fruits of that long trouble by elevating to the first place in the nation the foremost chieftain of that great contest—Gen. Grant. [Loud applause.] Here was afterward witnessed that sequel triumph which anticipated the wish of the nation by nominating as color bearer of the party that honored soldier, that shining citizen, the representative among Americans James A. Garfield. [Loud applause.] Every deliberation of Republican forces on this historic ground has been followed by signal success, and every contest on this spot has carried forward our line of battle, until to-day our forces overlook every position of the enemy. Indeed, so secure now is the integrity of the Union, so firmly imbedded in the constitution and laws of the land are the safeguards of individual liberty, so fairly and fully achieved, that by general consent the time has now arrived for the

in contemplation of new lines of operation. Having compassed the defeat of our opponents on all former occasions, the party is about to set its house in order and take counsel as to the direction and management of its future course. In the comparative lull of party strife which distinguishes the present condition of national politics there is discernible an increasing disposition to look after the men who are to execute, and the methods that are to guide them in the execution of the powers committed to them for the management of the affairs of the republic. As a result of the rule adopted in the last national Republican convention, this committee finds itself constituted by a large majority of gentlemen who have been clothed with the delegated powers of the convention in their several congressional districts. On this consideration may be grounded a hope that the voice of the people [applause] will, beyond recent precedent be felt in moulding the work you are assembled to perform so that its results may be such as to win the unhesitating and undividing support of every lover of these principles by which the party has heretofore triumphed and yet will triumph. [Applause] When we consider the memories of the past so ultimately connected with this city, and even with this edifice which the people of Chicago have so generously placed at your disposal, when we reflect upon the deep-seated concern among all people in the result of your deliberations and the various incentives to the abandonment of personal ambition in the party welfare, you cannot wonder that the committee, and beyond it the great Republican masses, extend you a most hearty welcome in this scene of labor in the constant hope that your efforts will result in such an exposition of Republican doctrine and disclose such an appreciation of Republican men to the choice of your nominees as to rejoice the hearts of your constituents and keep victory on the side of your ever-victorious banner. In conclusion, at the request of the national Republican committee, I have to propose to you as temporary chairman of the convention the Hon. Powell Clayton of Arkansas. [Loud applause.]

THE TEMPORARY CHAIRMANSHIP.

Mr. Lodge of Massachusetts.

Mr. Chairman—In accordance with the vote of the chairman of the committee, in accordance with precedent, you have presented the name of a gentleman as temporary chairman with no view of introducing any personal contest, with no view of attempting to make any test of the votes as to the strength of the respective candidates. There are many members of this convention I believe, who believe that the unanimous election of this gentleman would strengthen the cause. I, therefore, have the honor to move, as it is certainly most desirable, that we should recognize as you have done, Mr. Chairman, the Republicans of the South. [Applause.] I, therefore, desire to present the name of a gentleman well known throughout the South for his conspicuous parliamentary ability, for his courage and his character. I move you, Mr. Chairman, to substitute the name of the Hon. John R. Lynch of Mississippi, and I ask also that when the vote is taken the roll may be called on that question.

A Delegate—I second the motion.

The Chair—Gentlemen of the convention, you hear the motion for the substitution for the name of John R. Lynch of Mississippi, and on that motion a call of the roll is demanded.

The committee, according to usage had nominated ex-U. S. Senator Powell Clayton of Arkansas for temporary chairman but the nomination was decidedly unpopular, hence the independent nomination of Mr. Lynch, a colored member of Congress from Mississippi. An earnest debate ensued, the argument in favor of Mr. Lynch being that his choice would be a complement to the colored Republicans of the country. Geo. Wm. Curtis and several others spoke in behalf of Lynch, and several delegates argued in favor of sustaining the actions of the committee.

The roll was called and the secretary announced the result as follows: John R. Lynch 431; Powell Clayton 387. In Minnesota, D. M. Sabin voted for Lynch, and so did C. K. Davis, but the latter hurriedly changed his vote to Clayton. Graves, Gould, Rogers, Langdon and Newel made up Lynch's 6, and Clayton had Davis, Armstrong, Cokney, Crosby, Canfield, Hall, Barto and Page, leaving the delegation divided 8 to 6.

The following shows the vote by states:

Mr. Clayton—I move to make the election of John R. Lynch unanimous. [illegible]

This was carried unanimously. [illegible]

The Chair—John R. Lynch is temporary chairman. The chair would appoint as a committee to escort Mr. Lynch to the platform, Gen. Powell Clayton of Arkansas, Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts, and Henry [illegible] of South Carolina. The gentlemen will please wait upon him to the platform. [illegible] with unmistakable determination to give to the candidates of this convention a loyal and hearty support, wherever they may be. [Cheers.] I am satisfied, in my own mind, that whenever we go before the people of this country our action will be ratified, because the great heart of the American people will never consent to have a political party gain the ascendancy of this government whose chief reliance is on a fraudulent ballot and on violence at the polls. [Applause.] I am satisfied that the people of this country are too loyal ever to allow a man to be inaugurated president of the United States whose title to the position is brought forth in fraud. I am satisfied that the American people will ratify our action because they will never consent to have a revenue system for the government other than one that will not only raise the necessary revenue for its support, but will also be sufficient to protect every American citizen in his business. [Cheers.] Gentlemen, not for myself, but perhaps in obedience to custom, I thank you for the honor you have conferred upon me.

On motion of Mr. Bussel of New York, Mr. Sheard of New York and Mr. Lee of Pennsylvania were appointed temporary secretaries. The chair then called for the names of the delegates to serve on the various committees—credentials, resolutions, rules and order of business—which occupied a great deal of time.

The committee men selected by the delegations of Northwestern States are as follows:

Dakota—Permanent organization, N. E. Nelson; credentials, J. L. Jolly; resolutions, J. L. Jolly.

Montana—Permanent organization and credentials, Lee Mantle; rules and resolutions, W. F. Sanders.

Minnesota—Credentials, R. B. Langdon; rules and order of business, T. H. Armstrong; permanent organization, O. B. Gould; resolutions, Liberty Hall.

Wisconsin—E. W. Keyes was made chairman and George E. Shaw, secretary. J. H. Mead was named for the committee on credentials, Calvert Spensley on resolutions, F. C. Winkler on permanent organization and C. M. Butt on rules. Edwin Sanderson was selected for the national committee and E. H. Broadhead as vice president for the convention.

Mr. Pearce of Massachusetts offered the following resolution which was referred to committe on resolutions:

Resolved, That the subject of the revised apportionment of delegates to future national conventions and of the revised apportionment of members of the national committee be referred to the committee on rules and order of business with leave to report before the ballot for president.

THE PROHIBITION MEMORIAL.

Mr. Donnan of Iowa presented the following memorial, which, after a long discussion was read by the secretary:

We, members of the Woman's Christian Temperance union of the states herein represented by the signatures of our officers, believe that while the personal habits of the nation can be largely restrained by an appeal to the intellect, through argument to the heart, through sympathy, and to the conscience through the motives of religion, the traffic in these poisons will be best controlled by a prohibitory law. We believe the teachings of science, experience and the golden rule combine to testify against the traffic in alcoholic liquors as a drink, and the homes of America, which are the citadels of patriotism, purity and happiness, have no enemy so relentless as the American saloon. Therefore, as citizens of the United States, irrespective of sect or section, but having deeply at heart the protection of our homes, we do hereby respectfully and earnestly petition you to advocate and adopt such measures as are requisite to the end that prohibition of the importation, exportation, manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages may become an integral part of the national constitution, and that your party candidate shall be, by character and public pledge committed to a national prohibitory constitutional amendment. [Signed], Francis E. Willard, president; Caroline B. Buell, corresponding secretary; Mary A. Woodbridge, recording secretary; L. M. Stevens, assistant secretary; Esther Pugh, treasurer.

The Chair—It is referred to the committee on rules.

GIVING THE IRISH A CHANCE.

Leslie W. Bissell of New York presented the following which was referred to the committee on resolutions:

Resolved, That the committee on resolutions be and they are hereby directed to give a hearing to a committee appointed by the Irish National Land league of America to present a memorial to this convention on the subject of ownership of realty in the United States by foreigners.

Mr. Bayne moved to adjourn till to-morrow at 11 a. m. Carried. After the adjournment, the chair stated that committees on rules and credentials would meet in the hall, and the committee proceeded to the work on hand.

SECOND DAY.

This was emphatically a day of waiting, the committee on credentials not being ready to report.

Rev. Mr. Barrows, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Chicago, addressed the Throne of Grace.

Mr. Gary of Maryland presented a memorial of the Maryland State Temperance alliance on behalf of prohibition. It was read and referred to the committee on resolutions.

Mr. Mason, of Delaware, offered a resolution in favor of a presidential term of six years, and ineligibility thereafter. Referred.

Senator Plumb, of Kansas, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That American land should belong alone to those willing to assume the duties and responsibilities of American citizenship. The best interests of the republic are with those who are bound to it by the tie of ownership and possession of it. The system of tenant farming and absentee landlordism, which has disturbed Ireland and destroyed the peace of Europe, is opposed to the doctrine of the fathers, and has no place in the policy of a republic.

Referred to committee.

Mr. Hawkins, of Tennessee, offered the following resolution, and moved its immediate passage:

Resolved, As the sense of this convention, that every member of it is bound in honor to support its nominee, whoever that nominee may be; that no man should hold a seat here who is not ready to so agree.

The resolution was advocated by the mover and one or two others and severely denounced by George William Curtis and Mr. Pearce, of Massachusetts. Curtis said: "A Republican and a free man I came into this convention. By the grace of God, a Republican and a free man will I go out of this convention. The gentleman who was last upon the floor dared any one upon this floor to vote against that resolution. I say to him in reply that the presentation of such a resolution in such a convention as this is a stigma, an insult upon every man who stands here. This question is not a new question precisely; the same motion was brought up at the last convention, and a man from West Virginia—I honor his name—that man said in the face of the roaring galleries and in the face of all this success, this man from West Virginia said: 'I am a Republican who carries his sovereignty under his own hat.' Now, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Campbell's position in that convention, the wise reflection, the afterthought of the Republican convention of 1880, confirmed. [illegible]

Mr. Hawkins finally withdrew the resolutions. Other resolutions were offered relating to temperance, the elections of delegates, etc., to future conventions which were referred.

The committee on permanent organization reported as permanent president of the convention, Hon. John B. Henderson of Missouri, and lists of honorary vice presidents and secretaries. The chair appointed to conduct the permanent president of the convention to the stand Hon. G. A. Grow of Pennsylvania, George F. Hoar of Massachusetts and C. B. Williams of Indiana. The committee appointed by the temporary chairman escorted Mr. Henderson to the platform, and he spoke as follows:

CHAIRMAN HENDERSON'S SPEECH.

Gentlemen of the Convention: We have assembled to survey the past history of the party, to rejoice as we may because of the good it has done, to correct the errors there be, to discover if possible the wants of the present and with patriotic [illegible] provide for the future. Our past history is the Union preserved, slavery [illegible] [illegible] of battle, Maine has her honored favorite, whose splendid abilities and personal qualities have endeared him to the hearts of his friends, and the brilliancy of whose genius challenges the admiration of all. Connecticut and Indiana may come to us with names scarcely less illustrious than these. And now, in conclusion, if, because of personal disagreements or emergencies, another name is sought, there yet remains that grand old hero of Kenesaw Mountain and Atlanta. When patriotism calls he cannot, if he would, be silent; but, grasping that banner to him so dear, which he has already borne in triumph, he will march to a civic victory no less renowned than those of war. I thank you, gentlemen, for this distinguished mark of confidence.

A delegate from Arizona offered the following resolution, to be referred to the committee on resolutions: Resolved, That the appointment of offices in the territories by the president ought to be from the bona fide residents of the territories, and in accordance with the wishes of the people thereof.

Resolutions were also offered and referred in favor of a farmer in the cabinet, in the person of the commissioner of agriculture; that woman shall have a right to vote, all of which were referred. The committee on credentials were not ready to report and a recess was taken to 7 o'clock p. m.

On reassembling the committee on credentials informed the convention that they would not be ready to report this evening.

The secretary read the following message:

To Honorable Senator Dolph of Oregon—I have to report that there is no longer any doubt that the Republicans have carried a majority of the legislature of this state, which will secure a gain of a senator to the United States senate. [Applause.] They have also elected a Republican representative in congress, and Oregon is safe for the nominee of this convention for president.

The convention then adjourned.

THIRD DAY.

Thursday Chairman Henderson called the convention to order, when prayer was offered by Bishop Fallows, of the Reformed Episcopal church.

The committee on credentials reported, and the report was unanimously adopted.

The admission of the Mahone delegation was received with loud and prolonged applause.

By a light vote, but a unanimous one, the report of the committee on rules was adopted. Immediately afterwards Parks of California, chairman of the last named committee, sent up the majority report on apportionment for representation, and after it was read Gen. R. R. Bishop, of Massachusetts, sent up the minority report. The minority report provides for an additional delegate for each Republican congressman, and one additional for each 10,000 republican votes or major fraction thereof.

The majority report was adopted after a spirited debate, without dissent, as the minority was vehemently opposed by all the delegates from the South and many from the North.

The Platform.

The committee on resolutions, through Mr. McKinley, chairman, made its report, which was unanimously adopted, as follows:

The Republicans of the United States in national convention assembled, renew their allegiance to the principles upon which they have triumphed in six successive presidential elections, and congratulate the American people on the attainment of so many results in legislation and administration by which the Republican party has, after saving the Union, done so much to render its institutions just, equal and beneficial; the safeguard of liberty and the embodiment of the best thought and highest purposes of our citizens, the Republican party has gained its strength by quick and faithful response to the demands of the people for the freedom and the equality of all men for a united nation, assuring the rights of all citizens for the elevation of labor, for an honest currency, for purity in legislation and for integrity and accountability in all departments of the government, and it accepts anew the duty of leading in the work of progress and reform.

GARFIELD AND ARTHUR.

We lament the death of President Garfield, whose sound statesmanship, long conspicuous in congress, gave promise of a strong and successful administration—a promise fully realized during the short period of his office as president of the United States. His distinguished success in war and peace have endeared him to the hearts of the American people. In the administration of President Arthur, we recognize a wise, conservative and patriotic policy, under which the country has been blessed with remarkable prosperity, and we believe his eminent services are entitled to and will receive the hearty approval of every citizen.

THE TARIFF QUESTION.

It is the first duty of a good government to protect the rights and promote the interest of its own people. The largest diversity of industry is most productive of general prosperity and of the comfort and independence of the people. We therefore demand that the imposition of duties on foreign imports shall be made not for revenue only, but that in raising the requisite revenues for the government such duties shall be so levied as to afford security to our diversified industries and protection to the rights and wages of the laborer, to the end that active and intelligent labor as well as capital may have its just award and the laboring man his full share in the national prosperity. Against the so-called economy system of the Democratic party which would degrade our labor to the foreign standard, we enter our earnest protest. The Democratic party has failed completely to relieve the people of the burden of unnecessary taxation by a wise reduction of the surplus. The Republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff and to reduce the surplus, not by the vicarious and indiscriminate process of horizontal reduction, but by such methods as will relieve the taxpayer without injuring the laborer. Among the great productive interests of the country we recognize the importance of sheep husbandry in the United States, the serious depression which it is now experiencing, and the danger threatened its future prosperity, and we therefore respect the demands of the representatives of this important agricultural interest for a readjustment of duty upon foreign wool, in order that such industry shall have full and adequate protection.

THE CURRENCY.

We have always recommended the best money known to the civilized world, and we urge that efforts be made to unite all commercial nations in the establishment of an international standard which shall fix all the relative value of gold and silver coinage.

REGULATING COMMERCE.

The regulation of commerce with foreign nations and between the states is one of the most important prerogatives of the general government, and the Republican party distinctly announces its purpose to support such legislation as will fully and effectually carry out the constitutional power of congress over interstate commerce. The principle of the public regulation of railway corporations is a wise and salutary one for the protection of all classes of the people, and we favor legislation that shall prevent unjust discrimination and excessive charges for transportation and that shall secure to the people and the railways alike the fair and equal protection of the laws.

LABOR.

We favor the establishment of a national bureau of labor, the enforcement of the eight hour law, a wise and judicious system of general education by adequate appropriation from the national revenues whenever the same is needed. We believe that everywhere protection to a citizen of American birth must be secured to citizens by American adoption, and we favor the settlement of national differences by international arbitration. The Republican party having its birth in a hatred of the slave labor and a desire that all men may be truly free and equal, is inalienably opposed to placing our workingmen in competition with any form of servile labor whatever, at home or abroad. In this spirit we denounce the importation of contract labor, whether from Europe or Asia, as an offense against the spirit of American institutions, and we pledge ourselves to sustain the present law restricting Chinese immigration and to provide such further legislation as is necessary to carry out its purpose.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Reform of the civil service auspiciously begun under a Republican administration should be completed by the further extension of the reformed system already established by law to all grades of the service to which it is applicable. The spirit and purpose of the reform should be observed in the executive appointments, and all laws at variance with the objects of existing reformed legislation should be repealed, to the end that the dangers to free institutions which lurk in the power of official patronage may be wisely and effectually averted.

THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

The public lands are the heritage of the people of the United States, and should be reserved, as far as possible, for small holdings by actual settlers. [illegible] the acquisition of large tracts of these lands by corporations or individuals, especially where such holdings are in the hands of non-residents or aliens, and we will endeavor to obtain such legislation as will tend to correct this evil. We demand of congress the speedy forfeiture of all land grants which have lapsed by reason of non-compliance with [illegible] in all cases where there has been no attempt in good faith to perform the conditions of such grants. [illegible] foreign nations, and which gives us the right to expect that foreign nations shall refrain from meddling in American affairs. The policy which seeks peace can trade with all powers, but especially with those of the Western hemisphere. We demand the restoration of our navy to its old time strength and efficiency, that it may in any sea protect the rights of American citizens and the interests of American commerce, and we call upon congress to remove the burdens under which American shipping has been depressed, so that it may again be true that we have a commerce which leaves no sea unexplored, and a navy which takes no law from superior force.

THE TERRITORIES AND POLYGAMY.

Resolved, That the appointments by the president to officers in the territories should be made from bona fide citizens and residents of the territories where they are to serve.

Resolved, That it is the duty of congress to enact such laws as shall promptly and effectually suppress the system of polygamy within our territory and divorce the political from the ecclesiastical power of the so-called Mormon church, and that the law so enacted should be rigidly enforced by the civil authorities if possible and the military if need be.

A FREE BALLOT.

The people of the United States in their organized capacity constitute a nation and not a mere confederacy of states. The national government is supreme within the sphere of its national duty, but the states have reserved rights which should be faithfully maintained; each should be guarded with zealous care, so that the harmony of our system of government may be preserved and the Union kept inviolate. The perpetuity of our institutions rest on the maintenance of a free ballot, honest and correct returns. We denounce the fraud and violence practiced by the Democracy in the Southern states, by which the will of the voters is defeated, as dangerous to the preservation of free institutions. We solemnly arraign the Democratic party as being the guilty recipient of the fruits of such fraud and violence. We extend to the Republicans of the South, regardless of their former party affiliations, our cordial sympathy, and pledge to them our most earnest efforts to promote the passage of such legislation as will secure to every citizen, of whatever race or color, the full and complete recognition, possession and exercise of all civil and political rights.

The next business in order was the call of states for the announcement of members of the national committee. A motion to postpone the call was made and voted down, and the call was then proceeded with.

The convention then took a recess until 7 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

Chairman Henderson called the convention and the vast audience to order at 7:30 p. m.

After a little unimportant motions, the President said: The secretary will now call the roll of states, and when the name of a state having a candidate to present is called, the party selected to make the presentation will come forward and speak. The secretary then proceeded to call the roll of states, calling Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, and Connecticut, and, when the latter state was called, Mr. Brandagee of Connecticut arose, and took the stand.

Mr. Brandagee personally is a reduced and handsomer edition of ex-Gov. John S. Pillsbury. When midway in his speech he named Gen. Joseph B. Hawley, the applause was a surprise to every one. It was spontaneous, exultant, continued and renewed more than once. Applause also followed fast on the heels of the announcement, "If you will not support our man, we'll support yours." A solid nonpareil biography was injected to the leaded minion by his eulogy, and even as a Boswell he was not dry, but drew forth rounds of applause, especially when, as was natural, he referred to the soldierly record of his candidate. After he had spoken eighteen minutes he partly lost his grip on his hearers and gavel rapping was necessary, but a few happy sentences and the mention of Gen. Grant gave him new sway, which was not lost again. Mr. Brandagee commenced at nineteen minutes of 8, and the sun went down on his peroration at four minutes after 8, the speech having consumed twenty-three minutes.

The decent cheers which bade farewell to the portly figure of Brandagee had hardly died away when the secretary, running rapidly down the list of states, met an obstruction at Illinois, which developed in the shape of a ramrod-like, black-robed form, surmounted by an eagle beak and a rasping voice, surrounded by a Presbyterian-elder sort of face, all bearing the name of Shelby M. Cullom, United States senator.

He made himself heard magnificently, and made a better impression on the convention than some better speakers. The applause which the speech was skillfully framed to evoke just at the right time was judiciously distributed among the names of Lincoln, Grant and Logan—the latter, of course, receiving double measure.

The frame work of the speech was not so distinctly biographical as Brandagee's, and as there were more frequent catch phrases for applause, Mr. Cullom may be said to have done himself proud. When Gen. B. M. Prentiss of Bethany, Mo., ascended the platform and commenced to second the nomination of John A. Logan, His audience was chary of applause at first, except when Logan's name was mentioned; and on one occasion, evidently as a sort of relief the applause was prolonged until the chair had to call order. After that the audience—sadly be it spoken—guyed Gen. Prentiss, and, when he got mixed in his historical selections, ironical cheers drowned him out. He stepped down, and no one was saddened.

Expectation waited for the name of the state of Maine, was generously rewarded by such a clamorous burst of sound as had not been heard from human throats since the rafters of this same building trembled obedient to the name of Grant four years ago. There was no crescendo of applause, but a thunderous crash that brought delegates, alternates, and reporters to their feet in a moment. The cheers were so distributed on the floor that the silent spaces were concealed when they rose, and the whole audience seemed to be on its feet; every handkerchief, fan and other object of portable property in the hall seemed to fly into the air, and every voice in the building seemed to join in the screaming diapason of mad applause.

After the chairman had succeeded in producing comparative quiet, Judge West of Ohio was introduced. The sensation was intense, and the interest in Mr. West on account of his commanding presence, and sympathy for his infirmity, brought all to silence in the vast hall. The fine quality of Judge West's eloquence was not marred by injudicious and indiscernible cheering as it progressed.

Many a correspondent saw his paper dimly through eloquence-bidden mist of tears as Judge William West of Bellefontaine lifted his sightless eye toward the sky and pointed with his long, scholarly finger toward "those portals of light" whence Abraham Lincoln looked upon the scene.

The tall attenuated figure, Southern in general aspect and dress, was seated after the first few sentences, but still towered above any in its neighborhood. The eyes, which can only look inward, had nothing ghastly; their steadfastness, and the marble lips and typically American face, and its Brother Jonathan beard of grayish tint told thrillingly of the emotions seething in the heart below, and transmitted to the thousands in front by a high, resonant, attention-compelling voice, and incisive accent.

His presentation was as follows:

Gentlemen, the Republican party demands of this convention a nominee whose inspiration and glorious prestige shall carry the presidency with or without the state of New York; one that will carry the legislatures of the several states and avert the sacrifice of the United States senate; that shall sweep into the tide the congressional districts to recover the house of representatives and restore it to the Republican party. Three millions of Republicans believe that that man who, from the baptism of blood on the plains of Kansas to the toll of the immortal Garfield, in all that struggle of humanity and progress wherever humanity desires succor, where love for freedom called for protection, wherever the country called for a defender, wherever blows fall thickest and fastest, there in the fore front of the battle to wave the white plume of James G. Blaine, our

HENRY OF NAVARRE.

Nominate him, and the shouts of September victory in Maine will be re-echoed by the thunder of the October victory in Ohio. Nominate him, and the camp fires and beacon lights will illuminate the continent from the Golden Gate to Cleopatra's Needle; nominate him, and the millions who are now in waiting will rally to swell the column of victory that is sweeping on in the name of the majority of the delegates from the Republican states, and of our glorious constituencies who must fight this battle, I nominate James G. Blaine of Maine.

Gov. Davis' Appearance.

The cheering at the close of West's speech was not long enough to embarrass Gov. Davis, whose portly form, attired in a rather too full-skirted frock coat, appeared on the platform just at the right time. His manner was easy and assured. The speech was barely four minutes long, but the close left no sense of incompleteness. Perhaps the highest compliment paid it was the buzz of inquiry as to who this man Davis is that succeeded the first pause of inattention.

The Chairman introduced Gov. Davis.

C. K. Davis, of Minnesota—Mr. President and gentlemen of the convention: In face of the demonstration which we have seen and heard, it would seem scarcely necessary to second a nomination which appears already to be a foregone conclusion. [Cheers and applause.] [illegible] at this moment he is in his own person the embodiment of the definition of their choice for president of the United States. [Cheers and applause and cries of "Louder."] This preference is not the growth of any locality or of any one idea. It springs not from any cold calculation of expediency, although it is coincident with the highest expediency—the expediency of success; it is the majestic voice of three million of the great party of the Union of national progress, which emancipated man, which raised the country from the hell of civil war and made it so great that neither foreign foe nor domestic factions can affect it where it stands, secure on the eternal basis of right whereon it has been placed. Mr. Blaine is not the man of any state; he has grown far beyond that. To-day his persistent popularity, his magnificent personal traits, his unfailing tact, his unswerving loyalty to his party, and his commanding statesmanship are honored in every community, from Maine to California [applause], and from the St. Lawrence to the Gulf. Without the aid of without self-seeking, without combination, with no such condition to his success as the ruin of another man he stands here to-day with all these attributes, and the people of this country ask this convention to gratify their twice-deferred desire. [Applause.] He stands upon the friendship and confidence of Garfield, and when the life of the nation seemed ebbing away with the spirit of the great son of Ohio, when all the functions of government were languid, when business men felt the need of security, it was upon the arm of the great secretary that the nation leaned. He has conducted our foreign affairs so as to make us respected abroad, and that, too, upon principles almost coeval with the foundations of this government. [Applause.] He has undergone defeat in two conventions, and risen from each with greater strength than before. [Applause.] The campaigns which followed were most momentous, and imperiled the very existence of the party. Did he sulk in his tent like Achilles before the walls of Troy? [Cries of "No," "No," from all over the hall.] No; he rose upon the ruins of his adversity and made them monuments of his glory. [Cheers.] He led his competitors through the road of triumph to the White House. No word from him that the nomination was unfortunate. No auspices from him of want of success; but then he, this man from Maine, came forth with all his armament like a magnificent war vessel, every pennant flying, every sail set, every man at his post, and every gun thundering from its sides. [Applause.] This is the man—faithful to all trusts, superior to any fortunes, beloved as no American statesman has ever been—whom we present for your suffrages. [Cheers and applause.]

William C. Goodloe of Kentucky also spoke in support of the nomination. Although coming from that Democratic section, he disclaimed any semblance of dictation to Republican states as to whom they should have for their candidates. [Applause.] It seemed to him, however, that the plain and simple duty of the people's delegates was to ratify the people's choice [applause] conscientously believing that choice to be great commoner from Maine, he cheerfully seconded the nomination.

Thomas C. Platt of New York also seconded the nomination of Mr. Blaine, declaring his conviction that with Blaine as the standard bearer of the party, success was assured in New York and victory in the whole country.

GALUSHA A. GROW

of Pennsylvania also spoke in favor of Blaine's nomination.

Galusha A. Grow of Pennsylvania has grown into a familiar figure in the convention, and his white beard and darker mustache, his old-fashioned garrote collar and older-fashioned black stock were readily recognized, as, in choosing his chair for his platform, he rose to second Blaine's nomination on behalf of the majority of Pennsylvania's delegates. Even his audience, however, had grown a little weary of speech-making on one theme, and applauded out of time and tune until Gen. Henderson threatened to clear the galleries.

In excellent taste Luke A. Staley, one of the strongest John Sherman men in the convention, secured silence by reminding the convention that if they were not gentlemen, as well as Republicans, they should be. Mr. Grow was not again interrupted, and wisely concluded in short order.

The roll of states went on until New York was reached, when it burst upon the Blaine men, as thunderously as thousands of throats could voice it, that Arthur had friends in the convention; that there were other coats, hats, handkerchiefs, umbrellas, banners, flags, sheets of paper and "all those other movables" besides the sort owned by the Maine coherents. Marten J. Townsend got on the platform. His manner at first was suited to the matter of his speech, and both were in the line of policy adopted by the Arthur men—to avoid sensationalism and appeal soberly to the business interests of the country.

Like a clarion after a hoarse call rang out the voice of Gen. H. H. Bingham of Philadelphia, the first seconder of Arthur, and the immediate successor of Mr. Townsend. His mention of Arthur's name was again the signal for applause, not long but loud. People who, grown tired, were about to leave the hall, sat down and listened intently, and were not unrewarded.

His tribute to his candidates action in the trying times succeeding Garfield's death was well and worthily given. The familiar figure of John R. Lynch (colored) next appeared, and the audience listened to the pleasant and penetrating tones of his mellow voice with undemonstrative attention. He seconded the nomination of Arthur.

Patrick H. Winston, Jr., of North Carolina, followed Mr. Lynch, and was the third seconder of Arthur's renomination. There was a suspicion of Fourth of Julyism about the speaker.

P. B. S. Pinchbeck of New Orleans, a handsome colored man with an iron-gray beard, was the Louisiana seconder for Arthur.

Judge Laraker of Ohio nominated John Sherman in an appropriate speech. There were interruptions enough, but he kept his good humor through all, and closing with an effective period, left the convention with the impression that he had heard, not the most polished orator, but the most effective popular speaker of the evening.

Henry Holt, of Mount Sterling, Ky., seconded the nomination. Far down on the list is Vermont, and the hour had gone beyond the midst of night when ex-Gov. John D. Long of Massachusetts took his solid stand to nominate the son of "that brave little state." He paraphrased, in opening, the often quoted sentences of Garfield, appealing from the tumult of a convention to the impassioned judgment of the fireside.

Gov. Long grew more and more toward the higher eloquence which convinces without rousing to excitement. His words were as penetrating as his straightforward gestures, horizontally from the shoulder moment after moment were impressive through their very awkwardness. Every movement he won the deeper attention of his hearers. Every movement admiration for the speech and the speechmaker grew apace.

When he nominated "The honorable, I repeat, the honorable George F. Edmunds of Vermont," and left the platform, the state did not have to lead in the applause, nor was it all for Edmunds. George William Curtis seconded the nomination of Edmunds.

A warm flush relieved the customary paleness of his fine face, his action, without losing its customary majestic grace, had an unaccustomed spring and energy and the supressed excitement of the occasion lent a new thrill to his voice. Like Judge West's speech, as fine, on a different and lower plane, the periods of Curtis fell on an audience too spellbound for applause, too interested for interruption.

It was an admirable speech and admirably delivered. Senator Edmunds, of all candidates, has been rarely fortunate in all his presentations to the convention.

At the conclusion of Curtiss' speech, the clerk continued to call the roll of states until the completion thereof. At 1:45, the convention adjourned until 11 o'clock Friday.

FOURTH DAY.

THE BALLOTING BEGINS.

The Chair—Gentlemen of the convention: There is now nothing in order except to call the roll for the nomination of a candidate for the presidency.

Mr. Turner of Alabama—Mr. President, is that the call of the roll for balloting?

The Chair—For balloting, the nomination of the candidates.

The secretary then proceeded to call the roll of states for the nomination of a candidate for the presidency. After the announcement of the first vote by the secretary, the chair said: "A ballot for a candidate for the presidency having been had without securing a nomination, according to the rules the convention will now proceed to another vote. The secretary will call the roll." This formula was repeated until the fourth and last ballot had been taken. The ballots were as follows:

CONGRATULATIONS.

Telegrams came rushing in upon Blaine almost literally by armfulls. Hundreds of dispatches followed from all parts of the country, from every state in the Union. Following are a few of the most impressive:

Washington, June 6.—Executive Mansion. Hon. James G. Blaine: As the candidate of the Republican party, you will have my earnest and cordial support. [Signed] CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

Mr. Blaine's reply was:

Hon. Chester A. Arthur, President of the United States, Washington, D. C.: Accept my sincere thanks for your cordial assurances.
[Signed.] JAMES G. BLAINE.

Washington, D. C., June 6.—To Hon. J. G. Blaine: I most heartily congratulate you on your nomination. You will be elected.
[Signed] JOHN A. LOGAN.

Mr. Blaine sent the following dispatch to Senator Logan:

I am proud and honored by being associated with you in the national campaign.
[Signed] JAMES G. BLAINE.

Washington, D. C., June 6.—Hon. J. G. Blaine: Accept congratulations and cordial support.
[Signed.] JAMES R. HAWLEY.

Among others sending congratulatory speeches are Henry L. Dawes, Ben Harrison, Murat Halstead and ex-Gov. Cornell.

VICE PRESIDENT.

John A. Logan was named for Vice President and receiving 770 votes, his nomination was made unanimous and the convention adjourned sine die.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

In the senate, among the bills read a third time and passed on Tuesday were the following: Bill introduced by Conger, granting annual leave of absence, with pay, to letter-carriers. It authorizes the postmaster general to employ the number of substitute letter-carriers rendered necessary by the provisions of the bill, the compensation of such substitute to be at the rate of $600 a year. The bill giving a pension of $50 per month to the widow of Gen. Judson Kilpatrick; the bill authorizing the sale of a portion of the Fort Hayes military reservation to the Ellis County Agricultural society of Kansas; the house bill relating to the legislature of Dakota (it provides that the council of the territory shall consist of twenty-four members and the house of representatives of forty members, and at the next general election two members of the council and four of the lower house shall be elected in each of the twelve legislative districts of the territory); the bill introduced by Pendleton to regulate the payment of bills of exchange drawn in foreign countries on persons, firms or corporations in the United States. Adjourned to Monday.

On Tuesday, in the House, Mr. Payson, as question of privilege, called for consideration the bill reported from the committee on public lands, to prevent unlawful occupancy of public lands. After discussion the bill was passed. It prohibits the enclosure of any public land when the person or corporation making enclosure has no color of title to the land, and makes it lawful for any person to tear down and demolish any such enclosure when it includes more than 160 acres.

In the contested election cases of the present congress the house committee on elections has agreed to allow the following sums for expenses of those interested: Massey-Wise, Virginia, $3,500 each; Chalmers-Manning, Mississippi, $2,000 each; English-Peelle, Indiana, $2,000 each; Wallace-McKinley, Ohio, $2,000 each; Watson-Frederick, Iowa, $2,000 each; Wood-Peters, Kansas, $1,500 each; Craig-Shelley, Alabama, $1,000 each.

Mr. Hayson of Illinois, called up the senate bill to repeal section 1 of the act entitled "An act making a grant of lands in alternate sections to aid the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain railroad from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas" approved July 4, 1866. In consideration of the forfeiture, the Iron Mountain Railroad company is released from the obligations of a land grant road. An amendment was adopted excluding from this release that part of the railroad between Poplar Bluff, Mo., and the Arkansas state line, and as amended the bill was passed.

The house proceeded to vote on the California & Oregon land grant forfeiture bill, with a result of yeas 145, nays 6; no quorum. A call of the house disclosed the presence of 210 members, and the bill was passed; yeas 150, nays 10

It is the opinion of Rev. Dr. Eccleston that San Francisco is the Paris of America in the fondness of the people for amusement, their love of display, their disregard of religion and their reckless habits of speculation. He also notes that California has proportionately more suicides than any other state, and finds prolific causes in dissipation, financial embarrassment and domestic trouble.

Republican Ticket.

For President,
JAMES G. BLAINE,
of Maine.
For Vice President,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
of Illinois.
For Representative in Congress,
HON. KNUTE NELSON,
of Alexandria.

OUR CANDIDATES.

Jim,
Jim Blain,
Of Maine,
Our Jim,
That's him!

Who received the nomination, at the hands of the Republican party, at Chicago last week, for President of the United States. To say that the nomination is eminently satisfactory to the people at large is saying but little, as he is an universal favorite and the choice of two-thirds of the rank and file of the Republican party throughout our land. The name of James G. Blaine, one of America's greatest Statesmen, is too well known to need from us an introduction so we shall not assay to give it here. He is so well known that his triumphant election is a foregone conclusion. For years he has been prominent before the American people—a great leader, and his qualities of mind and heart has so endeared him to the masses that they will see that his majority is so empathic that there can be no misconstruing it. He is the candidate of the people and so emphatic and so positive was that vox populi that for once the machine was forced to pay due regard to its demand and the result is

BLAINE FOR PRESIDENT.

As if to make the thing more binding another great man—one who has been a prominent candidate for the first place and who is abundantly able to fill it, is placed upon the ticket as Vice-President. That man was a true and tried soldier, with whom every one in the least acquainted with the history of the rebellion, is as well acquainted as with the name of the sainted LINCOLN or the hero general, GRANT.

GEN. JOHN A. LOGAN

Stands to-day the peer of any noble American in the land, A MAN in the fullest sense of that grand word. In the councils of the nation, in the storm of war, as a patriot, soldier and statesman the name of JOHN A. LOGAN stands in the front ranks. To say that we are pleased with the action of the grand old party expresses but little, but could we wield the pen of the most gifted of earth's writers we could not do full justice to the men and to the wisdom of the choice. That they will be elected there can be no doubt. That they will discharge their duties creditably and that they will make a President and Vice President of whom the people may justly be proud, no one in the least familiar with their history will doubt.

Our candidate for Congress,

needs no introduction to the people of the Fifth District all of whom are familiar with his services in the State Legislature, and more recently in Congress. It has been truly said of him since he has been in the House of Representatives that he does more work than any three members beside. In addition to the regular routine work he personally superintends his extensive correspondence and none among his constituents so humble that he does not receive prompt attention to each and every request. There will be practically no opposition to his re-election.

Great Damage from Frosts.

There was a heavy frost Wednesday night the 28th, and on the night of Thursday the 29th ult. snow and frozen sleet did great damage to fruit and early vegetables. Our Pulteney correspondent gives a partial report of damage to vineyards and fruit in his section. Like disaster was reported from the vineyards of Naples. Farmers here report the loss of a greater part of the fruit in their orchards and gardens. Currants which were growing for a full crop were fully two-thirds frozen, and all early strawberries. H. B. Hoyt reports his loss of strawberries at fully seventy-five bushels. He also lost 800 [illegible]

[illegible]

Stick to the truth in all things, gentlemen, and then in the days of your affliction you can draw on us for sympathy and aid, assured that you will get both. For the present we can only advise you to come in out of the wet—to a land where summer frosts are wholly unknown.

Nelson's Bill.

Nelson's bill to open the Red Lake Indian Reservation came up in the House on the 10th but there being no quorum present, no action was taken upon it. Mr. Blount, of Georgia and Mr. Cutcheon, of Michigan strongly opposed the bill upon the thin excuse that it was against the interests of the Indians. Much they care about the "welfare of the Indians." And much they know about the needs of the country. There can be but one construction put upon their action in this matter and that one is not creditable to them as incorruptible. Mr. Nelson will do all in his power to have his bill called up and secure favorable action thereon but it is doubtful whether it can be done this session. He made a very able speech in favor of the bill and had there been a quorum present doubtless the bill would have passed.

THE ALLEGHANIANS.

On Saturday evening a large audience gathered at the new opera house to listen to this noted company of vocalists and bell-ringers and to say that the exercises were highly enjoyed conveys but little idea—it must be heard to be fully appreciated. Seldom, if ever, has our city enjoyed such a rich treat and we do not doubt that had our music loving citizens known what was in store for them the house would have been crowded. The Alleghanians are an old company but for the past eleven years have been in Europe so they were but little known here and our people are much too conservative to take everything on trust. The following is a part of the excellent

NOTE.

The exercises are so varied in their character as to render the whole delightfully charming. Mr. J. M. Boulard, the basso, has a remarkably well preserved voice for a man of upwards of seventy years of age. He is one of the grand singers of [illegible]

The bells played no unimportant part in the evening's entertainment. Innocent looking things though they were, standing huddled demurely together, (as who should say there is any music in us) but when the master hands swept over the board those same dumb bells just leaped right up in air and warbled out sweet music—all the same like a piano or a whole menagerie of canary birds and such. The concerted piece, "The Burning Ship" was the grandest piece of combined singing and acting we have ever witnessed and held the audience spellbound to its close. That alone was well worth the price of admission if there had been nothing else to interest and instruct.

As a whole the entertainment was such a rich treat that our faber can't describe it, can't begin to do the subject justice and we are not going to try it. We learn that there is a prospect that the company will favor our city with another entertainment upon their return from Winnipeg when all will have an opportunity to enjoy it for themselves. Should they come we have no doubt the hall will be crowded.

Peterson's Magazine for July is even better than usual, and is especially remarkable for an illustrated article on "Longfellow and Westminster Abbey." Our readers are aware that the English admirers of Longfellow have just placed a bust of him in what is called "Poets' Corner," in the great Abbey, where are the monuments or busts of so many of the more distinguished authors of England, from Chaucer down to Thackeray and Dickens. The article is a timely one, and gives engravings of "Poets' Corner," the bust itself, the place where it is put, and of the Abbey generally, altogether an exhaustive article, such as one rarely sees. The principal steel-engraving of the number, "I Care For Nobody," is a very charming one, illustrating a capital story by Frank Lee Benedict. The author of "Josiah Allen's Wife" contributes one of her inimitable humorous sketches. "Lord Avalon," a novelet by the popular author of "A Fifth Avenue Romance," is begun, opening with great spirit, and containing, among other things, a graphic description of an English fox-hunt. Altogether, there is no lady's-book published that can compare with "Peterson" in literary merit. The colored fashion-plates, the colored patterns, and the half-hundred other illustrations for new dresses, embroidery, etc., etc., are likewise unequaled. The price of this popular magazine is but two dollars a year, with great deductions to clubs. This is an exceptionally good time to subscribe or get up clubs, a new volume beginning with the July number, and every lady of refinement ought to take this magazine. Specimens are sent gratis if written for, to those wishing to get up clubs. Address Chas. J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Republican Ticket.

For President,
JAMES G. BLAINE,
of Maine.
For Vice-President,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
of Illinois.
For Representative in Congress,
HON. KNUTE NELSON,
of Alexandria.

OUR CANDIDATES.

Jim.
Jim Blain,
Of Maine,
Our Jim,
That's him

Who received the nomination, at the hands of the Republican party, at Chicago last week, for President of the United States. To say that the nomination is eminently satisfactory to the people at large is saying but little, as he is a universal favorite and the choice of two-thirds of the rank and file of the Republican party throughout our land. The name of James G. Blaine, one of America's greatest Statesmen, is too well known to need from us an introduction so we shall not assay to give it here. He is so well-known that his triumphant election is a foregone conclusion. For years he has been prominent before the American people—a great leader, and his qualities of mind and heart has so endeared him to the masses that they will see that his majority is so emphatic that there can be no misconstruing it. He is the candidate of the people and so emphatic and so positive was that vox populi that for once the machine was forced to pay due regard to its demand and the result is

BLAINE FOR PRESIDENT.

As if to make the thing more binding another great man—one who has been a prominent candidate for the first place and who is abundantly able to fill it, is placed upon the ticket as Vice-President. That man was a true and tried soldier, with whom every one in the least acquainted with the history of the rebellion is as well acquainted as with the name of the sainted LINCOLN or the hero general, GRANT.

GEN. JOHN A. LOGAN

Stands to-day the peer of any noble American in the land, A MAN in the fullest sense of that grand word. In the councils of the nation, in the storm of war, as a patriot, soldier and statesman the name of JOHN A. LOGAN stands in the front ranks. To say that we are pleased with the action of the grand old party expresses but little, but could we wield the pen of the most gifted of earth's writers we could not do full justice to the men and to the wisdom of the choice. That they will be elected there can be no doubt. That they will discharge their duties creditably and that they will make a President and Vice President of whom the people may justly be proud, no one in the least familiar with their history will doubt.

Our candidate for Congress,

needs no introduction to the people of the Fifth District, all of whom are familiar with his services in the State Legislature, and more recently in Congress. It has been truly said of him since he has been in the House of Representatives that he does more work than any three members beside. In addition to the regular routine work he personally superintends his extensive correspondence and none among his constituents so humble that he does not receive prompt attention to each and every request. There will be practically no opposition to his re-election.

Great Damage from Frosts.

There was a heavy frost Wednesday night the 28th, and on the night of Thursday the 29th ult. snow and frozen sleet did great damage to fruit and early vegetables. Our Pulteney correspondent gives a partial report of damage to vineyards and fruit in his section. Like disaster was reported from the vineyards of Naples. Farmers here report the loss of a greater part of the fruit in their orchards and gardens. Currants which were growing for a full crop were fully two thirds frozen, and all early strawberries. H. B. Howe reports his loss of strawberries at fully seventy-five bushels. He also lost 800 large tomato plants, grown in boxes under glass and set out some two or three weeks ago, an acre of early sweet corn, besides other early garden vegetables. Like damage has been sustained over a large part of this State.

The above item, taken from the Prattsburgh, (Steuben Co., N. Y.) News, is only another reason why people should leave that poor, old stranded wreck and pull for the shores of the Red River Valley where such disagreeable things are unknown. We do not feel like gloating over the misfortunes of our old time neighbors and friends but when we read of such instances as the above we always feel like preaching a little preach, advising them all to get out of those hyperborean regions and come to this glorious land of perennial summer sunshine. And [illegible] sent them as a judgment for their Annanias statements in relation to the garden spot of the world—which statements were only published to prevent a stampede to this country and not because the newspaper men believe them at all. Stick to the TRUTH in all things, gentlemen, and then, in the days of your affliction you can draw on us for sympathy and aid, assured that you will get both. For the present we can only advise you to come in out o' the wet—to a land where summer frosts are wholly unknown.

Nelson's Bill.

Nelson's bill, to open the Red Lake Indian Reservation, came up in the House on the 10th but there being no quorum present no action was taken upon it. Mr. Blount, of Georgia and Mr. Catcheon, of Michigan, strongly opposed the bill upon the thin excuse that it was against the interests of the Indians. Much they care about the "welfare of the Indians!" And much they know about the needs of the country. There can be but one construction put upon their action in this matter and that one is not creditable to them as incorruptible. Mr. Nelson will do all in his power to have his bill called up and secure favorable action thereon but it is doubtful whether it can be done this session. He made a very able speech in favor of the bill and had there been a quorum present doubtless the bill would have passed.

THE ALLEGHANIANS.

On Saturday evening a large audience gathered at the new opera house to listen to this noted company of vocalists and bell-ringers and to say that the exercises were highly enjoyed conveys but little idea—it must be heard to be fully appreciated. Seldom, if ever, has our city enjoyed such a rich treat and we do not doubt that had our music loving citizens known what was in store for them the house would have been crowded. The Alleghanians are an old company but for the past eleven years have been in Europe so they were but little known here and our people are much too conservative to take everything on trust. The following is a part of the excellent

NOTES.

The exercises are so varied in their character as to render the whole delightfully charming.

Mr. J. M. Boulard, the basso, has a remarkably well preserved voice for a man of upwards of seventy years of age. He is one of the grand singers of the age.

When Miss Hanlon sang, "Take me, Jamie Dear," not a Jamie in the hall could be found who would deny the soft impeachment—and refuse.

Miss Hiffert, the contralto, has a voice of wonderful power and she handles it with such perfect ease and skill that one felt as though he could listen to it for hours.

As a buffo, Mr. Walter Field takes the bakery. He seems to catch on to the spirit of the thing by intuition and always keeps his audience out of all possible danger of having the lockjaw while he is upon the stage. His make up is always irresistible. [illegible] music with the best masters of this and other countries, has spent some time in Italy and sings Italian like a native. She has added thorough culture to a naturally rich, clear voice and is one of the best sopranos our city has ever heard.

Miss Willard, a soprano, has a pure, sweet voice to which it is a quiet pleasure to listen and the acquisition of a trifle more energy or vivacity will make her among the best.

Mr. Hall, the tenor has a fine, cultured voice and left a good impression with our citizens with whom he will ever be a favorite.

No cat has dared to elevate its insinuating, plaintive "Miau" within a block of the opera house since the cat-astrophe-line take off.

The bells played no unimportant part in the evening's entertainment, innocent looking things though they were, standing huddled demurely together (as who should say there is any music in us!) but when the master hands swept over the board those same dumb bells just leaped right up in air and warbled out sweet music—all the same like a piano or a whole menagerie of canary birds and sich.

The concerted piece, "The Burning Ship" was the grandest piece of combined singing and acting we have ever witnessed and held the audience spellbound to its close. That alone was well worth the price of admission if there had been nothing else to interest and instruct.

As a whole the entertainment was such a rich treat that our faber can't describe it, can't begin to do the subject justice and we are not going to try it. We learn that there is a prospect that the company will favor our city with another entertainment upon their return from Winnipeg when all will have an opportunity to enjoy it for themselves. Should they come we have no doubt the hall will be crowded.

Peterson's Magazine for July is even better than usual, and is especially remarkable for an illustrated article on "Longfellow and Westminster Abbey." Our readers are aware that the English admirers of Longfellow have just placed a bust of him in what is called "Poets' Corner," in the great Abbey, where are the monuments or busts of so many of the more distinguished authors of England, from Chaucer down to Thackeray and Dickens. The article is a timely one, and gives engravings of "Poets' Corner," the bust itself, the place where it is put, and of the Abbey generally; altogether an exhaustive article, such as one rarely sees. The principal steel-engraving of the number, "I Care For Nobody," is a very charming one, illustrating a capital story by Frank Lee Benedict. The author of "Josiah Allen's Wife" contributes one of her inimitable humorous sketches. "Lord Avalon," a novelet by the popular author of "A Fifth Avenue Romance," is begun, opening with great spirit, and containing, among other things, a graphic description of an English fox-hunt. Altogether, there is no lady's-book published that can compare with "Peterson" in literary merit. The colored fashion-plates, the colored patterns, and the half-hundred other illustrations for new dresses, embroidery, etc., etc., are likewise unequaled. The price of this popular magazine is but two dollars a year, with great deductions to clubs. This is an exceptionally good time to subscribe or get up clubs, a new volume beginning with the July number; and every lady of refinement ought to take this magazine. Specimens are sent, gratis if written for, to those wishing to get up clubs. Address Chas. J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut St. Philadelphia, Pa.

THE LIVELY NORTHWEST.

A COMPARISON WITH OTHER SECTIONS—WONDERFUL CHANGES—THE THRIVING CITY OF CROOKSTON.

CROOKSTON, Special Correspondence, St. Paul Pioneer Press, June 7th.—It has been the privilege of your correspondent to travel over a considerable portion of Texas, and through all intermediate states, to the northern boundary of the United States, bordering on British North America,—and nowhere do I find vim and enterprise exhibited in as great a degree as in Northern Minnesota and Dakota. Men and women of the North have a quick elastic tread, and go through with the routine of the day's labors as though it gave them pleasure, instead of being a duty. I was struck with the changes that are taking place in this great Northwest as each year rolls round. While there are many wide-awake and prosperous towns in the Northwest, in my opinion none are more deserving of attention than the little city of Crookston, situated in Northern Minnesota, on Red Lake River, 252 miles northwest of Minneapolis, on the line of the Manitoba railroad running north to Winnipeg; situated in the midst of a large area of as fine agricultural lands as the sun ever shone upon—and, by the way, they have more sunshine to the square inch in Northern Minnesota and Dakota through the growing season than in any other portion of the United States, there being but a short time between twilight and dawn. Crookston is the county seat of Polk County and numbers fully 3,000 inhabitants, who have more pluck and good humor to the inhabitant than those of any town in the Northwest. Everybody "smiles" in Crookston, and every stranger coming into that town is made to feel at home in every sense of the word. Crookston has never had a boom; neither does she want one. It would pay any business man looking for a location to consider the advantages that this place possesses. They have a water power unsurpassed outside of Minneapolis, and which is only partially utilized. Two first-class roller mills, with a united capacity of 500 barrels daily, are already in successful operation and turning out a quality of flour unsurpassed anywhere in the world. They are enabled to do this from the fact that they are located in the No. 1 Hard wheat belt. These mills are now shipping from six to eight cars of wheat per week to the Eastern markets. One of the finest sawmills in the Northwest, with a capacity of 125,000,000 feet per annum, is nearly completed, and will be a great acquisition to this beautiful city. While many towns East, West, North and South have had their failures in business, Crookston has been comparatively free. All branches of business are in a prosperous condition; hotels are full, bankers are busy, merchants are smiling, and everybody is happy.

FRUIT IN THE NORTHWEST.

Moorhead News.

Hon. S. G. Comstock has one hundred apple trees in full bloom and doing finely. They were brought from the valley of the Upper Volga River, in the province of Kazan, Russia, and come from a much colder climate than will be found anywhere in the northwest. There are twenty varieties among them, and Mr. Comstock secured them through Professor J. L. Budd, of the Iowa State agricultural college of Ames, Iowa. That gentleman was sent by that institution of agricultural learning to find out whether any good fruit could be found anywhere which would grow in a climate as cold as that of the northwest, and with that idea in mind he travelled over a great portion of Northern Europe and Asia. In Russia he found what he was looking for. In the valley above named, that of the Upper Volga, as well as in other localities in Northern Russia, he found [illegible] hundreds of acres of orchards, consisting of apples, pears, plums and cherries, growing in the greatest profusion and developing very finely. The trees are very hardy. They are dwarfed to some extent, but the fruit is full and round and as fine as that grown in warmer latitudes. In the valley of the Volga the mercury goes down to fifty degrees below zero and the seasons are some weeks shorter than in this region, and there would seem to be no good reason why the varieties of fruits which grow there would not grow, not only here, but several hundred miles north of here. The trees are sold by the college on very reasonable terms, but the proviso is made that a record be kept of the development.

It is expected that these trees will be introduced quite extensively in the northwest, and that in a few years it will not be necessary to have fruit imported, as it will be raised in abundance here.

Red Lake Falls Gazette: A very unfortunate occident accurred to Mr. P. C. Schmidt Jr., Wednesday afternoon. A party of which Mr. Schmidt was a member, were driving past Roller Mill A, when the team became ungovernable and upset the buggy, the occupants however, jumping out before it was overturned, Mr. Schmidt being so unfortunate as to catch his foot between two logs, the force of his falling body completely breaking the large bone of the leg just above the ankle. Drs. Lemieux and Watson were immediately called and set the broken member. Everybody will sincerely hope that Mr. Schmidt will speedily and fully recover from his unfortunate and painful accident.

The American Agriculturist for July, 1884, is the most superb number of that periodical issued during its 43 years of existence. It is brimful of instructive, seasonable articles, made more interesting and valuable by one hundred original illustrations. Joseph Harris, after an interregnum of eight years, resumes his editorial connection with the American Agriculturist. Joseph Harris was formerly editor and proprietor of the "Genesee Farmer;" then for twelve years he wrote for the American Agriculturist. He was thoroughly educated at Rothamsted, England. Among other well-known writers in the July number of the American Agriculturist are: Dr. George Thurber: Andrew S. Fuller; Colonel Mason C. Weld; Dr. Byron D. Halsted; Dr. D. D. Slade; H. A. Haigh; Dr. Charles; W. Dabney; W. Z. Hutchinson; Alfred Tumble; J. M. Stahl; M. E. Bamford; E. E. Rexford; Ethel Stone; Agnes Sage, and many others. Among the larger engravings are: The Harvest Field, and "Farm Life in France" (both full page,) New Blackberry; New Gooseberry: English Shire Horses: Ayrshire Cow; $800 Barn; Various Rustic Structures; "Up in a Balloon, Boys:" A Lobster Quarrel, and a score of other illustrations of hints, helps, and labor-saving devices for all departments of rural and domestic life. Price, $1.50 per year; single number, 15 cents. Address American Agriculturist, 751 Broadway, New York.

Polk County Journal.

Crookston, Thursday, June 19.

'ROUND HOME.

A. J. Hilden, of Higdem, was in the city last Wednesday.

A large lot of logs are being driven over the dam. They go to Winnipeg.

There will be services at the Baptist Chapel next Sunday morning at the usual hour.

The Alleghanians at the Opera House on Wednesday evening next. Go and see them.

We are glad to see good stock coming into the county. Mr. Marcum and Mr. Bigham has just received a fine shorthorn cow each.

Mr. A. S. Gates is in town during court. His wife whose health is very much improved, has been visiting here about two months.

I have a good Hotel for sale, located right in the business part of the city.
H. W. LEWIS.

C. Olson is up from Garden attending court. He reports crops in Garden in splendid condition. Says they have never been better.

The skill of the Alleghanians in handling the bells would make the celebrated Peake family die of pique. (Dont shoot, we've dodged.)

John. Darco brought a sample of growing wheat last Wednesday to the JOURNAL Office that was sowed the 14th of April that is three feet tall.

C. H. Jefferson of this city has received the contract for building the new brick bank at Warren. He will commence work about July 1st.

The Crookston hose company are drilling nearly every night, and we should judge by this that they intend to keep that silver trumpet in this city.

C. H. Jefferson commenced veneering Eiken Bros. store building this morning. This will improve the appearance of their building very much.

Lots for sale. Farms for sale. Houses for rent.
H. W. LEWIS.

E. Miller brought in a sample of growing wheat last Wednesday from Russia that was about 30 inches high and had eighteen stalks to one kernal of wheat.

Don't forget the famous Alleghanians on Wednesday evening June [illegible]th. If you enjoy good music dont fail to be on deck armed and equipped as the law directs.

Swanson & Koeppe are delivering the brick for the veneering for Eiken Bros. hardware store. The work will be commenced at once, and pushed to completion at an early day.

A good farm for sale two miles from Euclid. Seventy acres in crop. Will sell at a low figure.
H. W. LEWIS.

The ever glorious will be observed in Crookston in due and ancient form. A big program has been prepared and every body should prepare to throw aside dull care for one day and come out for a good time.

Wm. Marin, Warren Godfrey and Frazier Montgomery returned from their exploring trip through the Red Lake country last Tuesday with a favorable report of that country. A full description of the trip and country will be given in our next issue.

Rev. S. H. Bartean was in the city from Angus on Saturday. In addition to a large crop of wheat, barley and oats he will raise an acre and one-half of cucumbers for seed and other garden vegetables. The cucumber seed is contracted with an eastern house.

I would say to the people of Polk County that I have on sale some of the most desirable lots in the city of Crookston.
H. W. LEWIS.
Office in JOURNAL building.

A. J. Clark has one of the most desirable stock ranches in the Dakota portion of the Bad Lands—and that is as good a stock country as there is on the continent. He wants a partner with a little capital, or stock. His address for a present, is Warren, Minn.

If you have any property that you wish to put on sale, call at the JOURNAL office.
H. W. LEWIS.

Next Wednesday our citizens will again have the oportunity of listening to the Alleghanians for one evening. All who have heard this excellent company are enthusiastic in their praises, and all will rejoice at this opportunity to hear them again. Secure your seats early and avoid the rush.

A fine residence on Broadway for sale, enquire of H. W. Lewis. Office in JOURNAL building.

A. J. Clark returned this week from a trip to the Bad Lands of Dakota and Montana having been there since some time last winter. He says that country is the hunters' paradise, game of all kinds being very plenty. M[illegible], the headquarters of the marquis [illegible] Mores is the principal place. There are vast deposits of coal which will in time give employment to thousands. A. J. thinks the Red River Valley lays over anything he has seen since he left.

The hotels are crowded this week.

A. Gilmour, of Fertile, is in the city this week.

E. K. Overland came up from Garfield this week.

Mr. Wheelden, of St. Hilaire, is in the city this week.

Mr. Kimberly, of Edna, was in the city last Tuesday.

The circus drew a fair crowd notwithstanding the rain.

Rev. C. E. Page left on Monday night for the conference at Glyndon.

Lou Freeman and S. J. Sprague of Fisher was in the city last Tuesday.

Thos Wilcox, of Fertile, was in on Tuesday saying how-dy to the boys.

The Pennock Grader and Ditcher seems to be growing in public favor.

There were no ten dollar bills sold on the corner of the streets last Monday.

The new ten foot sidewalk on the north side of Second Street is a great improvement.

Bauchman & Milette are putting a partition in their store, and fixing up in good shape.

Hack & Gallasch are having a new sign painted. McCarthy & Smith are doing the work.

Fred Anderson took a run down to St. Paul this week. He reports everything lively below.

Louis Fried, the man who sells so many horses in this country, arrived in Crookston last Friday.

Bro. Foote, of the Ada Index, gave us a pleasant call on circus day. Sorry we were not in at the time.

The new brewery building will soon be completed. It will be ready for occupancy about July first,

Our city presents a lively appearance this week, it being court week, there are people from all parts of the county.

Miss Pauline Feigle left last Tuesday for her home in Fontain City, Wis. She has been with her brother in this city for about a year.

We don't seem to be in danger of a drouth this summer. So far we have had just rain enough to help the growing crops out in good shape.

The Episcopal society will soon hold a grand concert. It is expected that a noted elocutionest will be present. We shall have more to say about this affair soon.

E. K. Overland, of Garfield, brought in a sample of oats from his farm, 30 inches high, also a sample of wheat 20 inches high. That is a pretty good showing.

The members of Col. Cobham Post G. A. R. will give a grand ball at the new opera house, in Crookston, Friday evening, July 4th, to which all are cordially invited.

Some granger from the Thirteen towns brought in a den of fox cubs that he had captured up there and sold them to Eiken Bros. They are peddling them out for kittens.

Mr. Koch, of St. Paul, was in the city last Tuesday. He is on his way to Grafton, D. T., there to perfect arrangments for the building of a large brewery at the cost of about $50,000.

The circus came and went. For the amount of money expended to get up that show we must confess to a feeling of disappointment in it. We believe they could have done better had they tried.

Wm. Patterson, the ticket scalper, who failed to give back the correct change was fined $75 and costs, or ninety days in the county jail. He will probably serve out his sentence in the county jail.

It is a great advantage to be educated. This fact was showed up again last Monday when officer McKinney brought down one of the ticket scalpers who was not well enough educated to give back the right change.

Geo. Bunzy was in from Maple Lake this week. He says if we wish to see the boss grain of Polk County we should just exactly come quid mit dot lake all the times quid. Thats the report from every portion of the county, George.

Uncle Damon Dodge, of Liberty, is serving his country in the role of Grand Juror this term. He says he has the finest corn in Polk County and has promised to set up the roasting ears for THE JOURNAL outfit on July 4th. He also boasts of his vegetable garden and our former experience convinces us that on garden sass Uncle Damon always knows what he is talking about.

Red Lake Falls expects a road from Lake Park this summer. That is a sensible move but the project of Rothpletz to connect the suburbs (Red Lake Falls) with the main part of the city, (St. Hilaire) is a very foolish one at the cost. If Rothpletz wishes to be nearer the business center, why don't he advocate street cars? Much cheaper and would answer every purpose just as well as an expensive railroad.

Many newspapers charge for the insertion of marriage notices but the JOURNAL never has. We have always inserted those notices free of charge and did the best we could to get them correct and we have only this to add: that as long as it does not cost a nickel to the happy parties they should not make quite as much of a row over a slight mistake as we would expect them to if they had paid us the value of our work.

A fine shower on circus day tended to diminish the receipts of the circus management and saved many a dollar for the county.

Terry & Collins have bought another fine team for their livery. The boys are bound to supply the demand for good rigs if they don't lay up a cent.

We understand that the grand jury will investigate the affairs of the county board in relation to certain rumors of fraud. Up to the hour of going to press we are unable to get a report of their conclusions.

Ole P. Renne brought up a sample of what the town of Garden is doing this year in barley. The barley stands nearly three feet high and is beginning to head out. It was sowed on the 29th day of April and pulled on Saturday, June 14th. This is the finest sample we have seen.

The streets of our city was crowded with people last Monday who came to see the white elephant, which they did not see. They did have a white elephant with them but owing to the heavy rains in the Red River Valley the paint was about all washed off.

One of A. Walters' employes left for Grand Forks last Tuesday to work in the brewery there. He has worked in the brewery in this city for five years, and was taught the business by Mr. Walter. He will probably find before he is away very long that Crookston is a pretty good place to live in after all, and that Mr. Walter is a pretty good man to work for.

Ben McKinney took in one of the ticket sellers belonging to Sells Bro's circus and placed him in durance vile for working the change racket. The ticket seller had a disagreeable habit of raking in a 10 spot for a dollar ticket and returning no change, or a $20 William and handing back $[illegible] or such a business. Ben got onto the little game and watched the chap and having satisfied himself of the guilt of the party he took him in and gave him in charge of special policeman Jim Creighton who took him to the bastile.

Earnest Buse is up from Minneapolis looking after his interests in Polk County. He is sanguine that Red Lake Falls will get a railroad before snow flies.

Wm. Kertson Jr., is starting a laundry on Broadway, two doors south of the post office. When you feel the need of washing go and see Kertson at the new Broadway laundry.

The brewery team was standing quietly on Robert Street when the circus parade came along and paid no particular attention until the camels and dromedaries, hitched to wagons came along, which so frightened them that the driver had his hands full to control them until the camels passed.

Mr. and Mrs. I. M. Underhill left for Ohio, on Friday last. They will long be missed by their many friends in this city who will unite in wishing them abundant success in their new home and that their relations there may be as pleasant as they have been here.

The Alleghanians will give another musical entertainment at the Crookston opera house, on Wednesday evening, June 25th. This company is one of the best that ever came north of St. Paul and our opera house will certainly be crowded, so secure your tickets early.

MINNESOTA NEWS NOTES.

Minnesota Farmers' Alliance.

A meeting of the Minnesota Farmer's State alliance was held in Mankato a few days ago. The attendance was quite small.

President G. M. Sprague, of Fillmore county, stated that the object of the meeting was to consult and determine what measures looking to the relief and advantage of the farmers are needed, and how monopolies were to be overthrown—what combination and organization was needed to accomplish.

On motion of Gen. W. G. Le Duc of Dakota county, Lysander Cook of Blue Earth, M. R. Edwards of Marshall county, H. A. Swaim of Rice county, E. D. Cornish of Blue Earth grange, were appointed a committee on resolutions. The following committee was appointed on revision of the constitution: Col. A. M. Burdick, Clay county; C. H. Brown, Fillmore county; William Muzzy, Otter Tail county; G. W. Day, McLeod county; J. S. Englerth, Blue Earth county.

There were many brief addresses from time to time and much debate by Col. J. Burdick, Gen. Le Duc, J. Diamond, Mankato, and others.

The committee on platform reported a series of resolutions, demanding free and equal rights to the full enjoyment of the fruits of their labors and necessary to their happiness and prosperity; recommending the securing as their representatives in and for all municipal, county, state and national governments the election of men who shall be pledged to fidelity and the enactment of equal and just laws; no break over demanding taxation of railroad lands held by companies surreptitiously, in such manner as to escape taxation but which have him actually sold; calling on congress to prevent railroad discriminations, demanding that public lands shall be saved for the people and not sold to anybody in large amounts, stating that it is the duty of congress to put the department of agriculture upon a footing of equality with the other departments of this government, the importation of contract labor and of foreign, pauper and criminal (assisted, so called) immigrants from any and all countries is condemned as an outrage on the spirit of our institutions and on the generous hospitality of our country stating that the state board of immigration of Minnesota is no longer necessary or advisable, and should be abolished and the expense saved to the taxpayer: That the existing tariff laws need and should immediately receive such revision and such reduction from time to time, of surplus receipts as will relieve the people of the burden of any and all unnecessary taxation: That the agricultural interests of this state demand an open market, free from all discrimination by railroad and elevator companies, and guarded from the control of boards of trade and wheat rings, and that wheat transportation should be at the lowest possible rate.

Other resolutions were adopted that it is unconstitutional to tax one class of population to enrich another class, however specious and plausible may be the pretenses under which it is done, that we are opposed to the doctrine that the tariff shall be constructed, not with a view to revenue mainly, but to enrich the capitalist engage in mining and manufacturing at the expense of the capital engaged in agriculture, that the labor engaged in agriculture in this state is "American labor and needs encouragement" as much as that of the mill and mine owners of the East, and that the best encouragement the government can give it is relief from the burden of unjust and unnecessary taxation.

The alliance elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

President—George W. Sprague.

Vice President—Washington Muzzy (at large); C. H. Brown, First district; D. H. Morse, second district; Hiram Van Wart, Fourth district; R. M. Profsfield, Fifth district.

Secretary—George W. Haugh.

Treasurer—A. Marty.

Lecturer—A. M. Burdick.

Ignatius Donnelly delivered a short address, in which the hard-ships of the farmers were set forth with a great deal of vigor. The next meeting of the Alliance will be held in 1885 at St. Paul.

STATISTICS OF THE STATE.

Brief Summary of the Report of the Commissioner of Statistics, Giving Information of General Public Interest.

The fifteenth annual report of the state commissioner of statistics has been issued. It shows that in the year 1882 the area devoted to wheat culture was reduced from 2,884,160 to 2,829,969. Since 1878 the percentage of the total cultivated area sown in wheat has been steadily decreasing and there has been a corresponding increase in the percentage of the area devoted to oats, corn and barley. Minnesota no longer relies wholly upon wheat. Generally the condition of agriculturists is improved throughout the state. The totals of acreage and crops are given as previously published. In wheat there were 2,829,969 acres sown, with a production of 32,170,258 bushels, making an average of 13.81 to the acre. Dakota, Goodhue, Otter Tail, Polk and Stevens produced over 1,000,000 bushels each. Of oats there were 769,133 acres sown, and an average production of 34.44 per acre; of corn, 628,512 acres, with an average yield of 26.42. Of potatoes, 5,074,736 bushels were produced from 47,004 acres. The hay crop exceeded that of 1881 by 346,000 tons. There is a material enlargement of the country devoted to flax. There are 95,493 farms, of which 1,863 are new. The apple trees and grape vines bearing show a marked increase. The products of the dairy have increased considerably.

OF LIFE AND DEATH.

The vital statistics follow. In 1882 there were 24,504 births, 14,104 males, 13,903 females, 610 twins and 155 illegitimate. Of these 7,779 were of American parents, 5,384 German, 3,669 Norwegian, 2,601 Swede, 952 Irish and 3,591 mixed parentage. There were 12,398 deaths, making the natural increase of population 15,206. There were six thriplet births. The least deaths were 851, in February, and the most 1,286, in August. From zymotic diseases 5,911 died, 1,506 from constitutional, 2,856 from local, 1,888 from developmental. 521 from accident, 16 from homicide, and 51 from suicide. About six males died to five females. General statistics of the different counties follow, and the pamphlet closed with 48 pages of miscellaneous statistics. There were 256 newspapers published, of which 11 were German, 3 Swedish, 5 Norwegian and 1 French. There were 8,878 marriages, 293 divorces and 9,212 foreigners naturalized; 5,049 Scandinavians, 2,123 Germans, 356 Irish and 1,231 British. The report which is long overdue, was declared by the ill health of Gen. Malmros and his recent transfer to Leith.

Minnesota Good Templars.

The Grand Lodge of Good Templars assembled at Minneapolis for the twenty-seventh annual session in Good Templar's hall. The attendance was much larger than usual, delegates being present from various portions of the of state.

The secretary's report showed membership 3,880 in good standing.

New lodges have been organized during the year at Lake Crystal, Amboy, Delavan, Blue Earth City, Freeborn, Mapleton, Elysian, Hamilton, Rushford, Leroy, Fairmont, Taylor's Falls, Pine City, Forest Lake, St. Paul, Minneapolis (4), Luverne, Edgerton, Mankato, Elgin, Bluffton, Glenwood, Deer Creek, Villard, Wadena (2), Hector, Excelsior, Alma City, Breckenridge, Brainerd, Cambridge and Vernon Center.

The following officers were elected for the coming grand lodge year: G. W. C. T., John M. Durnam, of Brooklyn Center; G. W. C., Rev. William Copp of Windom; G. W. V. T., Mrs. A. A. Batchelder of Albert Lea; G. W. secretary, Mrs. Kate L. Penniman of Minneapolis (re-elected); G. W. T., Miner Ball of Excelsior (re-elected); G. S. J. T., Mrs. O. A. Slafter of Pine Island. Representatives to the R. W. G. L. of the World; A. F. Newt of Minneapolis; W. P. Roberts of Minneapolis; alternates, F. E. Patterson of Rochester; Rev. W. W. Satterlee of Minneapolis, adjourned to meet at Minneapolis the second Wednesday in June, 1885.

Sewall P. Norton, of the Central house, Crookston, endorsed a forged draft of $1,000 for a guest who registered as L. Taylor, Elmira, N. Y., and who desired to invest his capital. Norton had to pay the draft.

Mr. Pearson was drowned while boating on the river at St. Peter, the body being recovered soon after.

The fourth trial of William F. Thompson at Minneapolis, on a charge of embezzlement from Farnham & Lovejoy was brought to a close in the district court by a verdict of not guilty.

Part second of the annual report of the insurance commissioner, devoted to statistics of life insurance, is in the press and will soon be issued. In a brief history of life insurance in America, the commissioner notes that there are now forty-five companies doing business, with aggregate assets of $500,000,000. Their payments to policy holders have exceeded $900,000,000. During the year, two new companies, the Equitable of Des Moines, Iowa, and the John Hancock of Massachusetts, have been admitted to do business in Minnesota, and the Charter Oak of Hartford, has withdrawn. There are now twenty-five companies doing business in the state.

The marriage of Kendall Green of Faribault to Miss Hattie Winter, took place at the Congregational church Wednesday afternoon, Rev. E. Gale officiating.

William, Jeese and Charles Stewart of Ward township, Todd county, aged respectively nineteen, seventeen and fifteen, are in the Long Prairie jail for three months. They became involved in a family quarrel, were bound over to keep the peace, and in default of $40 cost were jailed.

In the suit of Beynon & Wales of Daktoa against Mr. Burdick of the Diamond mills, Owatonna, for damages to the amount of $2,500, for machinery left in the mill and for breach of contract, the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiffs for $195 and costs. Gordon E. Cole was counsel for the defense.

The barn of Frank Remely of Georgetown, Clay county, was struck by lightning Wednesday morning the 11th, and set on fire and burned to the ground. The lightning also killed four horses, that were in the structure. Several sets of harness and some farm implements were also destroyed. There was no insurance. The loss will approximate $2,500.

Thomas O'Neil, who has been held in the Moorhead jail for a year or more for safe keeping, from Becker county, was taken back to Detroit a few days ago, and has now been adjudged insane, and will go to St. Peter.

Duluth is to have another paper, called the Journal, with R. J. Maguire editor and Fred Puhler manager.

A few evenings since a nicely dressed, well appearing couple went to Stillwater from St. Paul to get married. They called upon a pastor of one of the Protestant churches, and there discovered that a license was necessary. The gentleman went out to procure one, but was unable to find the clerk of the court. Returning soon, the party, with a gentleman and his wife as witnesses, drove across the bridge to Wisconsin, and while sitting in the carriage the marriage ceremony was performed, and the happy couple departed for home.

United States Marshal Denny, Deputy Marshal Brackett, and one other deputy arrived in Duluth, Tuesday morning with warrants for the arrest of parties indicted for alleged land frauds. It is said twenty-two indictments were found for pine land crookedness, seventeen of then against citizens of Duluth. The officers immediately served warrants on C. P. Byam, Frank Burke and Edward Lynch. Burke and Lynch gave bail before United States Commissioner Carey in the sum of $500 each, but Byam, against whom there are three or four indictments, was unable to get bondsmen. The officer went around with him all day in his search for bondsmen, and this evening Byam managed to give them the slip and escaped. He went into a saloon, where Byam called for drinks, throwing a $5 gold piece on the counter and went out the back way. The officer sat down and waited for him to come back, but he did not come.

The storm of Saturday was quite severe north of Northfield. Lightning struck in different places. Near Cascade the barn of Mrs. Kleybergher was struck and set on fire, and totally cansumed.

Ernest Sargent, aged sixteen, stole $100 from his employer, Mrs. Gillson Wells, but was captured at La Crosse.

At Detroit, Becker county, a jury brought in a verdict of $150 against the Northern Pacific for running over a wagon in which Jacob Wygart the driver was killed. A charge of manslaughter against the engineer was abandoned.

The house committee on public lands has agreed to report a bill providing for the forfeiture of 8,500 acres of land immediately north of Sioux City, which is claimed by the Sioux City & St. Paul railroad.

The sixteenth annual meeting of the Minnesota State Medical society will convene at the court house in Stillwater Thursday, June 19th.

Warden Reed of the State prison received from Sheriff Holcombe of Washington county August Stromberg, larceny from a dwelling house, one year; from H. M. Richardson of Olmstead county Allen Robinson, arson, six months, and Frank Smith, larceny in a dwelling house, one year.

During the thunderstorm Thursday afternoon the 12th, lightning struck in several localities about St. Paul. One lightning arrester in the fire alarm office at the central station was melted by the fluid, and the wire leading to the electric light in the clothing store of Henry Horman, at the corner of Seventh and Rosabel streets, was so charged that the light was fully lighted for several moments.

C. P. Byam, who was arrested at Minnesota Point, Lake Superior, recently, upon five indictments by the United States grand jury at Winona, for pine land forgeries, was placed in jail at St. Paul, to await his trial in the United States district court in October. It is claimed that he forged from a directory names to pre-emption papers for five different pine land claims and then hired strangers to personate the forged names at the receiver's office. He is a resident of Duluth and about thirty-five years of age.

WATERLOO.

A Graphic Account of a Visit to the Famous Battle-field.

A Buffalonian Abroad.

The battle-field of Waterloo as it lies to-day is an uninspiring spectacle—a good place to sit down and muse on life and men and the vanity of human things; but we had a vivacious little guide who spared no time for musing, but engaged us with a very dramatic recital in broken, though quite intelligible, English of the stirring things that happened on that bloody Sunday in 1815, when Bonaparte's brief candle went out and the European kaleidoscope rattled itself into a fresh combination. I can't help sympathizing with the bottom dog. The dramatic symmetry of Napoleon's career wins us against our reason.

I went out to Waterloo with some Englishmen, and I took solid comfort in giving them my small opinion of their Iron Duke, although we must allow that he did this business very handsomely.

But that guide. I shall not soon forget him. He made more of an impression on me than all the books I have read on the subject of Waterloo. He omitted nothing. He opened his soul to us, and he suited the action to the world. He gesticulated, he attitudinized, in short, he fought the battle over again for us. His English was doubly English. He was especially happy in his "hup, guards, hand hat hem!" He recited this thrilling incident over his shoulder as he led us down the two hundred and odd steps that mount to the summit of Mound of the Lion, and it was only by the most extraordinary presence of mind that I grasped the railing in time to escape a fall.

The Mound of the Lion is an artificial elevation which has been reared (very ill-advisedly, I think) in the midst of the field and of its earth, thereby modifying the configuration of the landscape, so that one can now gain so accurate an idea of the battle-ground as might otherwise have been obtained—unless indeed, the loss is compensated by the fact that the summit of the mound affords a commanding view.

The tranquility of the scene is impressive, and one is reminded of Byron's line:

"How that red rain made the harvests grow!"

I never saw a fairer stretch of country—hills and valleys and winding roads and shining villages. Every feature of this sweet landscape played its part in the drama of that day. On the right is the Chateau of Hougomont, against which, all day long, the French lines beat like the waves of the sea—the key of the English position, held to the last by the gallant Coldstreams Guards, though the house was burned over their heads. The old brick wall around the orchard still stands pierced with loop-holes, worn away by the pelting rain of musket balls. If you have any sort of imagination you can stand there to-day and see the fight. I suppose there has scarcely been a closer, hotter, bloodier battle in modern times. The lines were posted only a mile apart, and from the moment of the first assault upon Hougomont to the low despairing cry of the French General, "Tout est perdu! Sauve qui peut!" the battle was like the straining struggle of well-matched wrestlers.

Samuel J. Tilden Declines.

Samuel J. Tilden has written a letter to the chairman of the Democratic State Committee of New York, positively declining to run for President. He closes as follows: At the present time the consideration which induced my action in 1880 have become imperative. I ought not to assume a task which I have not the physical strength to carry through. I am therefore constrained to say definitely that I cannot now assume the labors of an administration or of a canvass grateful beyond all words to my fellow countrymen who would assign such a beneficent function to me, I am consoled by the reflection that neither the Democratic party nor the republic for whose future that party is the best guarantee, is now, or ever can be, dependent upon any one man for their successful progress in the path of a noble destiny. Having given to their welfare whatever of health and strength I possessed or could borrow from the future, and having reached the term of my capacity for such labors as their welfare now demands, I but submit to the will of God in deeming my public career forever closed.

Special from Waltham, Mass.

Fifteen hundred watches are now made daily at Waltham, and they are better in quality and lower in price than ever before.

Shot by a Dynamiter.

Toronto, Ont., Special:—Dr. Casse of Chicago, who caused so much excitement a few months ago at Ottawa and Toronto in connection with attempts to blow up the house of parliament, early Wednesday morning shot and killed William Hamilton in a house of ill-fame at Orillia, a little town 100 miles north of Toronto. When the row in which he shot Hamilton occurred, he was writing up a jewelry robbery. He went to Orillia to look for the robbers, and while in a house of ill-fame met Hamilton, who, it is said, knew more about Casse's connection with the dynamite gang than was calculated to please the latter. Hamilton threatened to expose the doctor, and in an altercation was shot dead. Casse was arrested and will likely be found guilty of murder by the corner's jury.

Dyspepsia.

Boston, Mar. 8, 1884.

I have used Burdock Blood Bitters for a severe case of dyspepsia with great success, and can conscientiously recommend it to any person troubled with any form of dyspepsia. JULIA BOYLEN,
6 Gilson Court, West Cedar St.

Bridgeport, Ct., April 11, 1884.

I have been greatly benefited by Burdock Blood Bitters. Two bottles entirely cured me of the worst kind of dyspepsia. I tried many other medicines, but entirely failed to get any relief from them.
EYRA L. NICHOLS, 8 Whitney Lane.

Providence, R. I., Apr. 4, 1884.

I am using Burdock Blood Bitters for dyspepsia and have received great relief. Have been seriously troubled with dyspepsia for five years, and heretofore have not found relief.
CHAS. R. SWEET,
65 William St.

East Boston, Mass., Feb. 11, 1884.

I have been using Burdock Blood Bitters for a bad case of dyspepsia. The first bottle (purchased at Bradbury's drug store, Washington St.) relieved me so much I procured the second bottle (at Putnam's drug store E. Boston), which has done me a great deal of good. A friend of mine using it for the same thing says it is splendid.

HER SECRET TROUBLES.

The Unknown Trials a Woman Endured Without Complaint—Why they Vanished.

Near the close of one of the most trying of the few hot days of the present year, a pale, care-worn woman might have been seen at the window of her dwelling apparently in a condition of complete exhaustion. Her efforts to meet the accumulated duties of her household have been great but unsuccessful, while the care of a sick child, whose wails could even than be heard, was added to her otherwise overwhelming troubles. Nature had done much for her and in her youthful days she had been not only beautiful but the possessor of health such as is seldom seen. But home and family duties and the depressing cares which too often accompany them had proven greater than her splendid strength and she felt at that moment not only that life was a burden but that death would be a great relief. This is no unusal experience. It is, in fact, a most common everyday occurrence, and a great prayer is constantly ascending from the thousands of homes for deliverance from the deadly power which is enslaving so many wives mothers and daughters. And yet these duties of life must be met. No woman can afford to turn aside from the proper care of her home and the ones who are committed to her care, although in doing these duties she may sacrifice her health, and possibly life itself. The experience of one who successfully overcame such trials and yet retain health and all the blessings it brings is thus told by Rev. William Watson, President Elder of the Methodist Episcopal church, residing at Watertown, N. Y. He said:

"My wife became completely run down through overwork and care of a sick member of our household, and I entertained serious apprehensions as to her future. She was languid, pale, utterly exhausted, without appetite, and in a complete state of physical decline. And yet she did not, could not neglect her duties. I have seen her about the house, trying courageously to care for the ones she loved, when I could tell from the lines upon her face how much she was suffering. At times she would rally for a day or two and then fall back into the state of nervous exhaustion she felt before. Her head pained her frequently, her body was becoming bowed by pain and all hope or enjoyment in life seemed departed. What to do we could not tell. I resolved, however, to bring back her life and vitality if possible and to this end began to treat her myself. To my great relief her system has been toned up, her strength restored, her health completely recovered and wholly by the use of Warner's Tippecanoe, which I regard as the greatest tonic, invigorator and stomach remedy that has ever been discovered. I was led to use it the more readily as I had tested the health-restoring properties of Warner's Safe Cure in my own person and I therefore knew that any remedy Mr. Warner might produce would be a valuable one. I have since recommended both Warner's Tippecanoe and Warner's Safe Cure to many of my friends and I know several Doctors of Divinity as well as numerous laymen who are using both with great benefit."

If all the overworked and duty driven women of America could know of the experience above described, and act upon the same, there can be little doubt that much of the pain, and most of the depressing influences of life might be avoided. Such truths are too valuable to remain unknown.

A COMFORTABLE FORTUNE.

One of the Memphis Men Who Became Suddenly Enriched.

Stories of sudden or miraculous wealth have always possessed a peculiar fascination for the masses, and the man who has drawn a prize in a lottery is regarded as the happiest of mortals. At the last drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery two Memphis men drew $15,000 each. One of these was Mr. B. J. Dorsey, who has been a foreman of hands at work upon the levees along the Mississippi. He has been living in humble circumstances at 33 Jackson street. An Avalanche reporter yesterday had curiosity to see the man who had drawn $15,000, so he repaired to the corner of Main and Jackson streets and inquired of some children where Dorsey lived.

"You mean the man that drew the lottery prize?" asked one of them.

"Yes," replied the reporter.
